HERZOG TRADED TO NEW YORK

NIGHT EXTRA

HERZOG GOES FOR BRIDWELL

By R. W. LARDNER.

Charley Herzog for Bridwell and Gowdy. This trade between the Boston Rustlers and New York Giants was announced this afternoon and everybody concerned in the deal gave forth a shout of joy.

Both clubs consider it a good trade. Charley Herzog, despite the fitting of his suspension and the "peace agreement" with Manager Tenney, was still a dissatisfied ball player here in Boston, and it seemed likely that he would never be able to give his best services under the conditions. Al Bridwell was dissatisfied at New York and actually anxious to get back to the team which traded him a few years ago.

President Russell and Manager Tenney are happy, because they didn't want Herzog after the recent unpleasantness. They know that Bridwell is a hard worker, a brilliant and exceptionally steady shortstop, an intelligent all-around ball player and a man who does most of his hitting in the pinches. In Gowdy they have a promising young first baseman, who should be able to go in as a regular when Tenney decides he has had enough.

President Brush and Manager McGraw of the Giants are perfectly satisfied. Bridwell didn't get along any too well with the Giant manager. Furthermore, Arthur Devlin's legs were going back on him.

Herzog at Third Base.

New York's plan is to use Herzog regularly at third base, shift Arthur Fletcher to short and put Devlin on the bench. It will give the Giants another right-handed hitter and make opposing managers think twice before they send another pitcher against McGraw's club, which was formerly pretty soft picking for the good pitchers.

Bridwell will be the regular shortstop for the Rustlers. Harry Steinfeldt will have the regular third-base job when he returns. That will make the Rustlers strong on that side of the infield. Gowdy will work out daily at first base until he is given a chance to show what he can do as a regular.

Ingerton Back at Third.

For the present, it is probable that Scotty Ingerton will perform at third. A new outfielder, of major league experience, will be added to the Rustler forces in a day or so. It will be necessary to give something for him, and one of the left-handed pitchers is likely to go, inasmuch as Billy Burke, who is going at a rapid clip in the Eastern League, will be returned to Boston in the Fall.

Fridwell and Gowdy will probably report here to-morrow, and will be in the game against Pittsburg to-morrow afternoon. Gowdy will take Tenney's place. Herzog won't lose any time pulling up stakes and departing for the Gay White Way in time to accompany the Giants West. He sent some laundry out at noon to-day, but he will get along without that for a few days.

FIREMAN ACT RULED ILLEGAL

Corporation Counsel Babson rendered an opinion to-day that an order "passed" by Acting Mayor Collins and four other members of the City Council, setting apart $25,000 for fifty extra firemen, is in direct violation of the revised city charter.

The Corporation Counsel finds that section 8 of the charter amendments of 1909 has been violated.

The penalty for violation of the provisions of this section is a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

This finding by the Corporation Counsel startled city officials to-day.

The section which is considered as violated by the firemen's order reads:

"Neither the City Council nor any member or committee thereof shall directly or indirectly take part in the employment of labor nor in the conduct of the executive or administrative business of the city or county."

"Six Votes Required."

Acting Mayor Collins introduced the order at the Council meeting last Monday. He and four other Councillors (Curley, Buckley, Kenny and McDonald) voted for it. Then the Acting Mayor signed the order.

Mr. Babson's opinion to-day reviews these proceedings, and then says that the Acting Mayor lacks authority to recommend such an order, and that six votes were required to secure its adoption. Only five were recorded in favor of it.

The opinion of the corporation counsel reads in part:

"To recapitulate, if the City Council had power to make the order it did not get the requisite number of votes. If the former act was repealed by the charter amendments, the only authority now to make transfers from the reserve fund is to the City Auditor. In either case the order is not a legal one.

"Second—The order on its face is in direct violation of Section 8 of the charter amendments of 1909, which provides that: 'Neither the City Council nor any member or committee thereof shall directly or indirectly take part in the employment of labor nor in the conduct of the executive or administrative business of the city or county.' The penalty on any person violating the provisions of this section is by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Powers of the Council.

"Under the present city charter the City Council cannot appropriate money to be expended solely for the employment of 100 additional laborers in the Public Works Department or for the employment of fifty additional firemen in the fire department.

"All the City Council can do under the provisions of this section is to appropriate such sum as it sees fit for a department; that sum is to be expended by the head of the department under the supervision of the Mayor in any legal way."

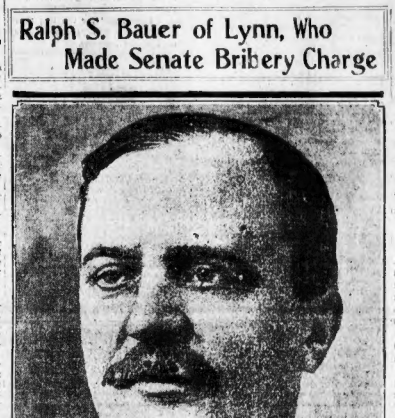
PELLETIER FINISHES WITH SENATE ACCUSER

Ralph S. Bauer of Lynn, Who Made Senate Bribery Charge



RALPH S. BAUER

District Attorney and Senate Bound to Get Facts

Ralph S. Bauer, president of the Lynn Board of Trade, came to Boston from Lynn to-day and went to the District Attorney's office, where he was questioned by District Attorney Pelletier about his statement to the AMERICAN yesterday that money was being used improperly in connection with the Lynn B. & M. Railroad track depression bill and that he had been told that he could swing three senatorial votes his way by paying $500 each.

BAUER NAMES A LIST OF LOBBYISTS.

Before Mr. Bauer entered the District Attorney's office reporters asked him if he had anything to say about bribery at the State House. After remarking that he thought it looked like rain Mr. Bauer added that he thought the idea odd about "the bribers marked the bribee." After talking to the District Attorney Mr. Bauer left the court house, saying that he was going to return to Lynn.

Mr. Bauer followed up his statement of yesterday with another one in which he gave a list of men who, he declared, had lobbied in the interest of the railroad and against the depression bill.

Mr. Bauer charged the railroad people with "spending a whole lot of money at the State House."

Mr. Bauer's charges have stirred legislative, political and business circles of the state as they have seldom been stirred before.

District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier of Suffolk County and the State Senate itself are investigating the charges.

Lieutenant-Governor Louis A. Frothingham says of these charges:

"It is up to the Senate to clear its name."

Men Mr. Bauer Names.

Here are the lobbyists whom Mr. Bauer names. They are described in Mr. Bauer's own language.

"Billy Coolidge, the chief counsel for the New Haven Railroad interests.

"Bob Southworth, the Boston & Maine lobbyist.

"Russell, the New Haven lobbyist.

"Walker, the Boston & Maine man from Lynn, the little fellow about fifty-five years old, with the mustache and bald head, the fellow who's always walking around with the lady's smile.

"That Boston & Albany man, Fernald, with the big bunch of splunge on his cuff.

"Then there was that big fellow, Wilson, who represents railway employes at the State House."

Mr. Bauer says that the foregoing gentlemen looked for the New Haven Railroad and the Boston & Maine Railroad with members of the State Senate.

"These lobbyists thieved," said Mr. Bauer, "with all the Senators. They would talk with some Senators, and then the latter would bring others to talk with them. They didn't seem to have any trouble in talking with any member of the Senate whenever they wanted to see them."

Mr. Bauer came to the AMERICAN office yesterday forenoon and saw the circulation manager, with whom he does business. Mr. Bauer said that he had a big story, and that he wanted to see the editor. The circulation manager took Mr. Bauer to the editor's room.

Mr. Bauer stated to the editor that he had a good story about money being used to defeat, or attempt to defeat, the Lynn railroad depression bill. He said that that morning he had been told that he could swing three votes in the Senate to his side by the payment of $500 each.

"Money Improperly Used."

The editor asked Mr. Bauer if he could print in the AMERICAN that Mr. Ralph S. Bauer, president of the Lynn Board of Trade, charged that money was being improperly used at the State House and that he had been told that he could buy three votes for $500 each. Mr. Bauer said that he would stand for that statement—that that was just what he wanted.

The editor sent for a member of the AMERICAN staff to take Mr. Bauer's statement. Mr. Bauer sat at the editor's desk with a pad on which he had written down the names of ten Senators. In making his statement to the reporter, Mr. Bauer said that the campaign expenses of three of the senators had been promised for their votes against the depression bill; that three other Senators were being paid for their votes and that an effort had been made during the night and would be continued that morning to induce four others to change their votes so that the depression bill would be lost by reconsideration.

Then Mr. Bauer made the statement

NEW ORDERS ON CHOLERA

Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh to-day ruled that, on account of Asiatic cholera, all Italian immigrants to Boston must undergo bacteriological examination for cholera before being permitted to land here.

Bacteriological examinations for cholera take time. One bacteriologist, with four assistants, can handle only fifty cases a day.

NEW OFFER FOR THE RUSTLERS

President William Hepburn Russell of the Boston National League Baseball Club received a long distance telephone message from Ned Hanlon in Baltimore this afternoon in which Hanlon said that he would make a higher offer for the club than the one which was turned down.

Russell refused to accept the offer. Neither would he decline it. Hanlon will be in Boston Monday or Tuesday to discuss matters further with Russell.

BRIBERY CHARGE MADE BY RALPH S. BAUER TO AMERICAN

"Money has been used in connection with this legislation. Some of the opponents of the bill have been paid outright. Certain others have been promised that their campaign expenses will be looked after.

"I was told myself that I might control three votes that have been against us by putting up $500 for each.

"An elevated structure could cost the railroad $2,000,000 less than to depress the tracks. The railroad does not want to spend that money, and they are trying to keep from it by spending a whole lot at the State House."

EVANS WINNER AT MANCHESTER

MANCHESTER, Mass., July 21.—Chick Evans carried the gallery in his morning match with Eastabrook, and he produced some shots that amazed those looking on. He poked out one of those 200-yard drives for which he is famous, and got a good lie on the fifth and at the long distance against the wind, he was 100 yards with a mighty fine second. Against the wind it will be disputed, Eastabrook did not have a chance, however, for he played exceedingly well at times. The match ended at the fifteenth hole, where Evans nearly drove the green, 305 yards, and got a 3.

Their cards:

Holes
Out	5	5	5	4	4	5	5	3	37
Eastabrook	5	5	5	5	4	5	5	4	38
In	5	4	5	5	5	5	6	3	41
	5	5	5	4	4

P. W. Whittemore of Essex had a rather easy time winning from H. K. Kerr of Melrose, though the latter was expected to give him a good match.

G. H. Crocker is getting well along in years, but plays golf with the vigor of perpetual youth. He defeated Ray Gorton of Blue Hills Up the match being settled on the 16th green. They were around in 78 apiece and played about on a par all the way around.

CONFER AGAIN ON COUNTRY CLUB CASE

A conference on the Brookline Country Club case was held in Judge Pickman's private office in the court house to-day that lasted two hours. Club and Law Enforcement League attorneys were present. The league wants a warrant issued against the club alleging it is a liquor nuisance. Nothing was said regarding the result of the conference, and it is believed there has been no action on the league's warrant application.

ER ASKED AMERICAN TO PRINT HIS STATEMENT ACCUSING SENATORS

auer, president of the Lynn Board of Trade, came to the Boston AMERICAN office yesterday morning and asked to see the editor of the paper. He was taken to the editor's room. He said that he had ny being used in connection with an attempt to defeat the Lynn railroad depression bill. He said that money was being used, and that he knew it because he had been told that morning that he could ng three Vo to his side by the payment of $500 each.

The editor asked Mr. Bauer if he could print that statement as coming from Mr. Ralph S. Bauer, president of the Lynn Board of Trade, and Mr. Bauer said he could; that that was just what he wanted. The editor sent for a member of the AMERICAN staff, and Mr. Bauer related to him the story printed in yesterday's AMERICAN, in which Mr. Bauer said that money had been used in an effort to defeat the depression bill, and that he had been told he could secure three votes by paying $500 each.

After the story told by Mr. Bauer appeared in the AMERICAN, Mr. Bauer returned to the AMERICAN office and told the editor that too large type had been used in printing his statement. He said that he was afraid that he would be called before the bar of the Senate.

The editor of the AMERICAN told Mr. Bauer that he thought he (Mr. Bauer) was doing a great public service in exposing the improper use of money at the State House, and that his statement was considered news of the highest importance.

that was printed in the AMERICAN, notes being made by the reporter who wrote it out immediately. Just before Mr. Bauer left the AMERICAN office he stated that he had given the story exclusively to the AMERICAN, not having gone to any other newspaper office.

"Too Big Type Used."

The story was printed in the AMERICAN. Mr. Bauer returned to the AMERICAN office and told the editor that too big type had been used in displaying the story. He asked that smaller type be used in later editions. He said that he was afraid that he would be hauled up before the bar of the Senate and asked to explain his statement.

The editor of the AMERICAN told Mr. Bauer that he (Mr. Bauer) was doing a public service in exposing the improper use of money at the State House, if his story was true. Mr. Bauer left the AMERICAN office.

The names of the senators that Mr. Bauer had written on a piece of paper were not printed in the AMERICAN.

Mr. Bauer said he was told that he might have the votes of three Senators for $500 each. He says now that $500 was a high figure.

"Five hundred dollars is a ridiculous figure," he says. "It is too high—$400 too high. Fifty dollars would be a lot."

Mr. Bauer tells the AMERICAN that Vice-President Timothy E. Byrnes of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad promised him that all of his road's opposition to the Lynn depression bill would be withdrawn, that the promise was fulfilled for a while and then broken.

Opposition Came Back.

"I went to see Mr. Byrnes a couple of weeks ago," says Mr. Bauer. City Solicitor Wadleigh of Lynn went with me. I asked Mr. Byrnes if he would not withdraw all of the New Haven's opposition to the depression bill. Mr. Byrnes promised now that he would. The opposition was withdrawn, but only for a while.

"Suddenly, without a word of explanation, and for some reason that I have been unable to fathom, the entire railroad gang in the State House lobby was put to work to defeat the bill. Who were they? Oh, there were a lot of them.

"There was Billy Coolidge, the chief counsel for the New Haven Railroad interests; Bob Southworth, the Boston & Maine lobbyist; Russell, the New Haven lobbyist; Walker, the Boston & Maine man from Lynn, the little fellow about fifty-five years old, with the mustache and old bald head, the fellow who's always walking around with the lady's smile, and that Boston & Albany man, Fernald, with the big bunch of spinach on his chin. Then there was that big fellow, Wilson, who represents the railway trainmen at the State House."

It was whispered about the State House today that the investigation which has resulted from Mr. Bauer's charges may date off on several tangents. It was said the following might be done, among other things:

That "Walker, the Boston & Maine man from Lynn," might be asked if he is registered in the Sergeant-at-Arms' office as a lobbyist for the Boston & Maine Railroad.

That Fernald, the Boston & Albany lobbyist, may be asked if he considers that his registration for the Boston & Albany permits him to lobby for anything and everything.

That Wilson, who is supposed to represent a certain branch of organized labor, might be asked, both by State House officials and by the members of his labor organization, how much truth there is in the Bauer statement that he was lobbying for a steam-pure railroad proposition.

Danger for Lobbyists.

The State House expects that the Bauer charges will result in a most sweeping investigation. More than one person about the State House expressed the hope today that the investigation would result in closing the doors of the Capitol against the lobbyists who infest the place.

Practically every member of the Senate is anxious to see Ralph S. Bauer and have a talk with him. They want him to go into the details of the charges he made to the AMERICAN.

Mr. Bauer was last seen at the State House early yesterday afternoon. Previously he had visited the office of the AMERICAN and unloaded himself of the statement which the AMERICAN printed. Copies of the AMERICAN, with Mr. Bauer's statement, reached the State House shortly after noon, and shortly after the Senate had passed the Lynn track depression bill. Legislators and others began to look for Mr. Bauer. Mr. Bauer disappeared.

Two legislators, Senator George Holden Tinkham of Boston and Senator Charles H. Pearson of Brookline, failing to locate Mr. Bauer, went to District Attorney Pelletier's office and demanded that an investigation of the charges be made. A police inspector went looking for Mr. Bauer. The latter got out of Boston and reached his home in Lynn before the inspector located him.

What Mr. Bauer Said.

There was talk yesterday and to-day of calling Mr. Bauer before the bar of the Senate to explain the charges, but it was suggested that it might be the better course for the District Attorney to complete his investigation before legislative action was taken. This course, it was pointed out, would guard against the granting of an immunity bath to persons who testified before a legislative body. If criminal acts were disclosed at a legislative investigation, it was feared that the guilty parties might escape under the "immunity bath" statute.

The big fact which seems to impress itself on State House folks is that Mr. Bauer charged that there had been both bribery and solicitation of bribes in connection with a measure which was before the Legislature for action.

Here is what Mr. Bauer said:

"Money has been used in connection with this legislation. Some of the opponents of the bill have been paid outright.

Elevated Would Cost $2,000,000.

"I know that certain others have been promised that their campaign expenses will be looked after for voting on the side of the railroad. I know what I'm talking about.

"I was told myself that I might control three votes that have been against us by putting up $500 for each.

"A desperate effort is being made to defeat the bill. Last night one or three of them—worked all last night in their efforts to swing some Senators into line, and to-day's vote will show whether or not they succeeded.

"It would be business suicide for Lynn to allow that elevated structure to be erected as the railroad proposes.

"The tracks run through the most valuable section of the city. Land there is worth from $12 to $15 a square foot. It is the most valuable land in Essex County.

"To build an elevated structure would cost the railroad at least $2,000,000 less than it would to depress the tracks. The railroad naturally does not want to spend that money, and they are trying to keep it by spending a whole lot at the State House."

Law Against Bribery.

Here is the Massachusetts statute on the giving of bribes:—

Revised Laws, Chapter 210, Section 6.—"Whoever corruptly gives, offers or promises to a legislative, executive, judicial, county or municipal officer, after his election or appointment, either before or after he has taken his oath, any gift or gratuity whatever, with intent to influence his act, vote, opinion, decision or judgment upon any matter, question, cause or proceeding which may then be pending, or which may by law come or be brought before him in his official capacity, or as a consideration for any speech, report or service in connection therewith, shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for not more than five years or by a fine of not more than three thousand dollars and imprisonment in jail for not more than one year.

Revised Laws, Chapter 210, Section 7.—A legislative, executive, judicial, county or municipal officer who corruptly requests or accepts a gift or gratuity or a promise to make a gift or to do an act beneficial to him, under an agreement or with an understanding that his vote, opinion or judgment shall be given in any particular manner, or upon a particular side of any question, cause or proceeding, which is or may be by law brought before him in his official capacity or as a consideration for any speech, work or service in connection therewith, or that, in such capacity, he shall make any particular nomination or appointment, shall forfeit his office, be forever disqualified to hold any public office, trust or appointment under the constitution and laws of this Commonwealth, and be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for not more than ten years or by a fine of not more than $5,000 and imprisonment in jail for not more than two years.

What Depression Bill Is.

The bill which is the innocent cause of all this turmoil is now in the Secretary of State's department, undergoing the process of being engrossed on parchment. It has yet to pass the enactment stage in each of the two legislative chambers. Afterwards, if it passes these stages, it goes to the Governor for his signature or veto.

The bill provides that the railroad grade crossings at Central street, Lynn, shall be abolished, and that the Boston & Maine Railroad tracks at this junction shall be depressed below the street level. One element in Lynn favors depression. Another favors an elevation of the railroad tracks above the street.

NEW YORK HIT BY BIG STORM

NEW YORK, July 21.—In one of the most violent thunderstorms that has ever visited New York more than a dozen buildings were struck by lightning to-day, among them being the Catholic Church of the Guardian, at Georgia, one of the landmarks of Coney Island. Accompanying the rain and lightning was a gale than blew fifty-nine miles an hour. Immediately after the church had been hit flames burst from the roof of the big edifice, and it was soon doomed, despite the firemen's utmost efforts. The church was erected in 1880, and was valued at $75,000.

ANNIVERSARY OF BULL RUN

MANASSAS, Va., July 21.—Veterans of the Civil War, "Yanks" and "Rebs," today clasped hands on the battlefield of Bull Run. Thousands of men who wore the Blue and the Gray thronged the historic fields where General Jackson was named "Stonewall" by General Bee and where the Confederates in the first great battle of the war shattered and drove the Union army across the Potomac. The observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the battle at Manassas was impressive.

This morning the veterans marched from room to Henry Hill, three miles away, which was in the centre of the battle, and heard patriotic speeches by Colonel Edmund Berkeley, Senator Martin, General George W. Gordon, Grand Commander of the Confederate Veterans; John E. Gilman, Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, and others. Each veteran was decorated.

After the ceremonies the Union and Confederate veterans formed in battle array and marched up Henry Hill towards one another, repeating the movement of the battle fifty years ago. When the two lines met they hailed and clasped hands. A thrill chord went up and many of the grizzled old soldiers wept.

THE EVOLUTION OF A TEMPERANCE DRINK

How Hires Rootbeer Came to be Discovered.

For ages there has been a desire on the part of millions of people to find a drink at once delightful to the taste and agreeable to the system. In the effort to find this drink, chemists have experimented with essential oils, synthetic flavors, and even sedatives and narcotics.

Many discoveries of fruit drinks have been made. Some of these have been exquisitely pleasing combinations of refreshing drinks, but it was found that the human system would take only a limited amount of the fruit acid, that more than that amount would cause excess of gastric juice.

Hires Rootbeer was worked out as a result of the effort to make a drink at once healthful and pleasing. It is the one drink that can have only beneficial effects on the system no matter how much of it is taken.

The pleasing flavor is the result of the ingredients that enter into it: Sarsaparilla, Juniper Berries, Hops, Spikenard, Teaberry Leaves, Ginger and Sassafras.

Hundreds of thousands of people have drunk Hires from babyhood to middle age, for Hires has been made for more than a third of a century. It has been perhaps longer and more favorably known by a greater number of physicians than any other beverage.

The tonic flavor of the roots and herbs that enter into it are well known. Hires never disarranges the stomach, but only benefits the blood by pleasing the taste and quenching the thirst. That is the reason why it has come to be regarded as the great American drink.

"Summer Tired"

The old fashioned theory of summer tired being a condition that must be tolerated because it is due to hot weather and its enervating effect upon the system has been proven a false one.

"That tired feeling" simply indicates most clearly a run down condition—a lack of proper performance of organic action, a forerunner of sickness upon the slightest exposure.

LIPKOWSKA SPURNS BAKLANOFF

Naughty Prima Donna Dismisses Baritone for His Attentions to a Dancer.

Spurning a divided admiration, Mme. Lydia Lipkowska, the dainty and spirited Russian soprano and the idol of Boston opera lovers, has given George Baklanoff, the big Russian baritone, his dismissal, or his "conge," as the gossip-loving Parisians express it in discussing the case now.

The baritone, whose admiration for Lipkowska was well understood in this city, was given the choice, cables from Paris say to-day, between his tender friendship with Mme. Lipkowska, or his sudden attachment for Mlle. Ida Rubinstein, the daring Russian actress and ballet dancer.

One version of the Paris story is that Baklanoff deliberately left Lipkowska for the Rubinstein. But the other version, and one which is readily accepted in Boston, is that Lipkowska, roused to indignation seem, by the constant coupling of Baklanoff's and Mlle. Rubinstein's names, put a definite and decisive end to the friendship between herself and the handsome baritone.

IDA RUBINSTEIN

GEORGE BAKLANOFF, SMOKING A CIGARETTE.

LYDIA LIPKOWSKA.

Mme. Rubinstein is the beautiful Russian dancer who is said to have won the admiration of George Baklanoff, who had been accredited with being devotedly attached to Mme. Lipkowska during the engagement of the latter two at the Boston Opera House.

A Tempestuous Beauty.

That Lipkowska, who is a tempestuous little beauty, would do this in a second is well understood. She has an ardent temperament, which contributes much to her operatic success. She brooks no slight or imposition, real or fancied. This was shown in Boston when she went into the courts and forced the Hotel Lenox to cease naming some of the dishes in the hotel menu after her. She sought no fame by way of the kitchen. She declined to share her name with any soup or salad.

All the more does Lipkowska scorn to share the attentions of any man, even Baklanoff, with any other woman, especially a ballet dancer. Lipkowska is a coloratura soprano, a grand opera star—moreover, a Slav. And nowhere are the fires of temperamental emotion fed to more burning flame than in the breast of a daughter of cold, frozen Russia.

The sensational friendship between Baklanoff and Ida Rubinstein also involves another figure of international fame, Gabrielle d'Annunzio, the Italian novelist.

For D'Annunzio, hooker of women's hearts, fell a victim to the gay charms of Ida Rubinstein and is now said to be furiously jealous of Baklanoff.

The singular part of this tangle of crossed loves, from the American standpoint at least, is that three out of the four principals are already married.

Mme. Lipkowska is the wife of a wealthy Russian landowner. They have a little girl of nine years, who was with Mme. Lipkowska during all her Boston engagements. It was briefly told that Mme. Lipkowska was not happy with her husband, and planned some time to obtain a divorce.

George Baklanoff is married, but, like Lipkowska, is not happy in his wedded life. When the friendship between Lipkowska and Baklanoff sprang up in Boston, it was understood that each was contemplating divorce, which would leave them free to wed again, more happily.

Ida Rubinstein is known as Mlle. Rubinstein, but she is really Mme. Gunsbourg. Her husband is a wealthy Russian, but he is not associated with the daring dancer now, except by name.

Baklanoff and Mlle. Rubinstein are now in Paris, where the ballet dancer has been playing the leading role in the D'Annunzio Debussy mystery play, "The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian."

Lipkowska is in London, where she is finishing her new engagement at Covent Garden.

Baklanoff will return to Boston in November and Lipkowska will probably be here in January, if present negotiations for the Boston Opera Company are successful.

Will Return to Boston.

It will be interesting enough to Bostonians to see how Lipkowska and Baklanoff bear themselves toward each other here next season. But the situation may be much more engaging if, as reported, Ida Rubinstein follows Baklanoff over to this side.

D'Annunzio, who is extremely piqued in the intimacy between Baklanoff and Mlle. Rubinstein, is said to have made up his mind that, if the two come here, he will follow them and prevent any effort at marriage.

When Baklanoff left Boston last Spring at the close of his 1910-1911 engagement, he was given a farewell banquet at the Lenox. One of the guests was Mme. Lipkowska. She sat on the baritone's right hand. The two conversed much in their native Russian and seemed as happy as children. Lipkowska was in particularly high spirits. One of her gay pranks was singing "I've Got Rings on My Fingers and Bells on My Toes." She had carefully learned the English words of the chorus, which she sang with delicious fun. Baklanoff went to Paris, and Lipkowska left Boston soon after for London.

Meanwhile reports had begun to come from Paris and Rome of the sudden admiration of Gabrielle D'Annunzio for Mlle. Ida Rubinstein. The pious ones were startled at D'Annunzio's determination to have the ballet dancer assume the title role in "St. Sebastian," taking the part of the young Roman martyr. Later dispatches said that D'Annunzio sought to wed Mlle. Rubinstein but that Gunsbourg, the dancer's husband, came forward as an inconvenient and legal obstacle.

D'Annunzio's disregard of the conventions is known. He roused bitter comment of people when he broke Eleonora Duse's heart, merely to furnish himself a theme for his novel, "Il Fuoco." Incensed him for all time when she found he had won her love merely to make an academic study of a woman's sincere passion.

Then Baklanoff went to Paris and supplanted D'Annunzio in Mlle. Rubinstein's affections. This, according to the latest Paris cables, has cost him the esteem of Mme. Lipkowska, who brooks no rival.

THIN BLOOD AND RHEUMATISM

Whatever Builds up the Blood During an Attack Will Cure the Disease.

This Ohio Woman Tried the Tonic Treatment After Being Crippled by Rheumatism and Was Cured.

There is a great deal still to be learned about the cause of rheumatism but one fact now stands out prominently—the rapid thinning of the blood from the beginning of the attack. This may be one of the causes of the disease or one of its effects but it is known that anything which will build up the blood during an attack of rheumatism will cure the trouble. Such a remedy either attacks the cause of the rheumatism or counteracts its harmful effects and enables the system to throw it off. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills owe their curative effect to this action.

This treatment for rheumatism is well illustrated in the case of Mrs. E. C. Alpach, whose address is R. F. D. No. 1, Vanatta, Ohio. She says:

"I suffered for nine months from rheumatism in my right hand and arm and think it was partly caused by an injury. My hand was so crippled that I could not use it at all. I had a dull heavy pain in my right arm all the time and was in great misery. When I got up in the morning my arm would be numb and the pain would be so great that I would have to cry. There were sharp, shooting pains through my arm. I became very nervous and could scarcely dress myself.

"I did not see that the doctor's treatment was helping me and quit taking it. Through a friend I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I noticed in a few days that I was being benefited. I took the pills until I recovered the use of my hand and the rheumatism has never bothered me since."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured anæmia, chlorosis, sciatica, nervousness, after-effects of the grip and fevers, and neuralgia, owing to their blood-building property. Send today for our free booklet, "Diseases of the Blood."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

ADAMS SQUARE

TWO MEN HELD AS BURGLARS

Charged with breaking and entering the store of the Hawthorne Drug Company at No. 111 Dudley street, Roxbury, early today, Patrick J. Callahan, alias James Evans, and Herbert F. Knight, alias Albert Smith, were arraigned in the Roxbury Police Court before Justice Williams, after a sensational chase in which several shots were fired. Both pleaded not guilty and were held in $3,000 each for the August grand jury.

People living in the vicinity of Washington, Cliff and Dana streets were aroused by the shooting and assisted the officers in making the arrest. One of the burglars was trapped in the Collins building, next to the drug store, while the other was captured in an alleyway at the rear of the store.

As they got for their desperate chance was rarely nine cents from the cash register of the drug store. They overlooked a cent in another part of the drawer. A resident of Dana street hearing the noise they made in ripping off the iron grating from one of the rear windows caused their arrest. From her window she could see the men. She rushed from the house and notified Patrolmen Michael E. Finegan and John W. Doherty.

Knight, according to the police, was a pal of Edward Bannon, who was shot and killed a few years ago by a patrolman of the Court square station, after a running pistol duel on Milk street near Federal.

YANKEE GIRLS DON'T KNOW HOW TO POSE

CHICAGO, July 21.—"American women do not know how to pose for a photograph. That is the reason the world does not know they are the most beautiful of all women." This expert opinion was given to-day by Rudolph Dubrkow of Berlin, Germany, on his way to St. Paul to attend the annual convention of the American Photographers' Association. "I have one main mission in coming to this country, and that is to show American women they have not the slightest idea of how to pose for a photograph."

SUGAR TRUST AID TO BOTH PARTIES

NEW YORK, July 21—John E. Parsons, for many years general counsel for the Sugar Trust, testified to-day before the congressional investigating committee that that organization contributed $10,000 to the Republican campaign fund to elect President Benjamin Harrison. The money, he said, was paid to the chairman of the National Republican Committee, whose name he believed was Armour. Mr. Parsons stated that he contributed personally to the campaign fund of Alton B. Parker, who ran for President on the Democratic ticket in 1904.

Congressman Hines of Maine, when Mr. Parsons resumed the stand, wanted to know whether he thought of federal laws to control trusts.

"The way I look at the matter is this. The government represents the people, or public, and when the public commences to cuss, the trusts, they will hurt not the trusts but themselves," he replied.

"The trusts are stronger than the public and in a battle the stronger must win. The men who organize trusts are strong men, and they can take care of themselves whether attacked or not, but if you want sugar, oil or other commodities, you must allow the men who give them to you to make a little money."

"You believe, then, that everyone should be allowed to capitalize if they wish to?" asked Mr. Hines.

"Should Keep Hands Off."

"Yes, everyone should be allowed to capitalize. The government should keep its hands off. Federal antitrust laws are all wrong. The proper laws of that class, if they must be made, should be state laws. The Federal laws cover all States, and what may be perfectly good for California may be no good for Maine. I'm against a Federal law."

The Congressman then pointed out to Mr. Parsons that the government found it wise to provide a pilot for large steamers in order that the public might be protected, and wanted to know if the same precaution was not applicable to trusts.

"Now I don't think so. I greatly doubt whether or not it can be worked, and even if it can, it can only hurt the public itself."

Says He Is Father of Trusts.

Mr. Parsons' created some mirth among the spectators when he was asked whether or not he had drawn the plan that had created the Sugar Trust.

"Well," he said, "for years that honor was disputed with me by many men. That was while everything was running smooth for me. But then when the waters began to ripple they all disappeared and left me the honor, if it can be called such. I drew the papers, and, as it was before the Standard Oil and other trusts were ever thought of, I consider myself the pioneer or father of the trusts."

Charles R. Heike, who became secretary of the American Sugar Refining Company in 1889, was questioned as to what he knew of the Hem found on the books of the company marked "Special expenses."

The Hem was for $6,296, and the committee has been trying to find out whether or not it was a contribution to one or the other of the old political parties for the campaign of 1902. Mr. Heike said that the entry was made seven years before he became an officer of the trust, and that he knew nothing of it.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 21.—Admitting that he recognized the inevitable, "that the reciprocity bill was already passed," Senator LaFollette of Wisconsin to-day made his speech in the Senate against the measure. He chided the newspapers for uniting, as he said, in favor of the bill.

LAWRENCE MEN FAIL TO AGREE

LAWRENCE, July 21—After a two-hour wrangle a conference to-day between a committee for the city administration and for the bankers who seek a commission form of government ended in a deadlock. The conference took place in City Hall. It was public. The audience chamber was filled with citizens of all classes. Unable to come to any agreement, the two committees will wait upon Governor Foss Monday.

It was at the Governor's suggestion that today's conference was held, to see if some suitable solution for governing the city and for straightening out its finances could not be found. The Governor told them to talk it over, and if unable to agree to come back to him. Having achieved only a deadlock, the committee will have recourse to the Governor again.

Clash at Conference.

The bankers, who asked Governor Foss to appoint a commission form of government to get a $500,000 emergency loan for the city, were represented by Justin L. Varney, cashier of the Bay State National Bank; President C. J. Corcoran of the Lawrence Trust Company, and Clinton O. Andrew, treasurer of the Broadway Savings Bank.

Cashier Varney denounced the city administration as "incompetent, inefficient and dishonest." There were numerous clashes between Varney and Mayor Cahill, the principal speakers for each side. Mayor Cahill proposed that the city ask the legislature for permission to borrow $200,000 outside its debt limit. This equals the deficit left by the White administration.

Varney—Who's to spend this $205, only?

Mayor Cahill—The chosen representatives of the people.

Varney—I'll never agree to have this administration spend one cent. It has already shown its incompetency. It is you, Mayor Cahill, who is as much to blame as anybody.

Neither Side Gives In.

The bankers' committee insisted that the city ask Governor Foss to approve a request to the Legislature for a $500,000 loan, to be expended by a commission of five appointed to supplant the present administration and to be in power till the end of the present municipal year.

Mayor Cahill—Would you disfranchise the people of Lawrence?

Varney—No. At the end of the year we would put the city government back.

But neither side would budge. When some orators had failed to break the deadlock it was decided that the only thing to do was to go back with their troubles to Governor Foss.

TROOPS READY FOR WAR GAME

With the exception of the Corps Coast Artillery, which has just completed its annual tour of duty in the harbor forts, and the Naval Brigade, which is on board the U. S. S. Chicago, the entire militia of Massachusetts is in readiness to take the field on Saturday in the most ambitious "war game" undertaken by any State troops.

As outlined by Captain Mark A. Hanna, secretary of the militia department of the general staff of the army, the State troops will be divided into the "Red" and "Blue" armies, the "Blue" forces, under General Embory P. Clark, attempting to recapture Boston from an invading force, and the "Reds," commanded by General William A. Bancroft seeking to hold it. The capture of New York city is the ultimate aim of the invading forces, while the "Blues" plan to divert them from that city.

The organizations to take part are the Second, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth and Ninth Regiments of infantry, the First and Second Corps Cadets, organized into a provisional regiment, Batteries A, B and C, Field Artillery, Troops A, B, C and D, Cavalry and the signal and Ambulance Corps. In speaking of the manoeuvres, Captain Hanna says:

Plot of War Game.

"General Few's forces will concentrate July 23 near Salem and General Clark's will concentrate about thirty-five miles away, near Lowell. The manoeuvres will be continuous throughout the period and probably will extend over pretty much all of the northeastern portion of Massachusetts, between Boston and the Merrimac river. The only portion of the situation which is common property at this time reads as follows:

"A state of war exists between the United States and a foreign power. During May the invader landed a strong force to the south of Boston and advanced against and captured that city. Since that time the bulk of this force has been transferred to the present principal theatre of war in the vicinity of New York city, where the main contending armies are now confronting each other. The principal fleet of the United States navy is blockaded in Hampton Roads, but a weak fleet of cruisers based on Portland, Me., is free to go and come on the New England coast.

Governor Foes in Field.

"It is commonly known also that General Few's command constitutes that part of the invading force which has remained in Boston and that General Clark's force is made up of the detachments of United States troops which have been in central Massachusetts and along the Merrimac river observing General Few in Boston.

"Red artillery will not join the infantry until the fourth or fifth day of the manoeuvres. It is not needed with the main manoeuvering forces before that time, and this arrangement gives it an opportunity to take its regular instruction course in target practice, and in field exercises at the Ipswich target range.

"The Governor of Massachusetts will be present in the field throughout the manoeuvres as chief umpire.

GRAND TRUNK SCORES POINT

PROVIDENCE, July 21.—The Grand Trunk Railroad scored today in its running fight with the New Haven system over a location in Rhode Island for the Grand Trunk's projected branch, the Southern New England.

Judge Baker of the Rhode Island Superior Court today ordered work to stop at midnight on the new freight houses which the New Haven road is building at Woonsocket across the right of way of the Southern. The Southern is to file a bond to indemnify the New Haven for possible loss by delayed contracts in case the location is eventually awarded to the New Haven.

As soon as attorneys agree on a bond a temporary injunction is to be issued restraining the New Haven from building the freight houses. This injunction is to obtain until the issue is settled by the condemnation hearing on September 15.

The Woonsocket freight house plans call for location of the greater part of the work in Blackstone, just over the State line. A small part of one freight house and the greater part of the other is to be stated on Massachusetts soil. The question now arises whether the New Haven will stop work only on the Rhode Island side of the line, while rushing the job ahead in Massachusetts.

It is expected that the Southern New England will seek to restrain the New Haven from continuing construction work on the Massachusetts side, unless the New Haven calls off together all the activity men now putting in foundations for the freight houses.

To-day's hearing was on the Southern's petition for an injunction to restrain the New Haven from continuing on its freight house work. John S. Murdock, for the Southern, said that the Boston terminal site is necessary to the Southern's route. N. W. Smith and Vice-President E. G. Buckland, for the New Haven, said that an injunction would cause loss to the New Haven through interference with contracts now let, also that the court ought not to interfere till the condemnation hearing. Mr. Murdock pointed out that it was much easier to stop work on construction than to get the construction removed after it was finished.

BEGIN CRUSADE ON THIN BATHING SUITS

As the result of a crusade against flimsy bathing suits, which have been seen frequently at Revere and Winthrop beaches this summer, begun by the Metropolitan park police, a young man was brought before the Chelsea Court on a charge of wearing a suit alleged to be almost transparent and was fined $20. Many complaints have been made of bevies of young women bathing costumes, the male bathers being the worst offenders, although a number of young women have appeared frequently at both beaches in somewhat startling costumes. The man fined said he was Herman Densmore, twenty-five, of No. 645 Ocean avenue. He appealed.

B. R. T. IS AWARDED SUBWAY CONTRACT

NEW YORK, July 21.—By a vote of 14 to 2 the Board of Estimate and Apportionment to-day awarded the contract for New York's subway extensions, involving a total expenditure of approximately $200,000,000, to the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. This is a complete defeat for the Morgan interests, which were backing the rival bidder, the Interborough-Metropolitan Company.

KILL AMENDMENT TO RECIPROCITY BILL

WASHINGTON, July 21.—By a vote of 39 to 37 the Senate to-day defeated Senator Townsend's amendment to the reciprocity bill instructing the President to open negotiations with Canada for the maintenance of a waterway through the St. Lawrence River to the Great Lakes and the Welland Canal.

FALL RIVER

Notwithstanding the fact that "Fall River looms up," a city of indomitable courage, her operatives and her merchants would like to know just what the trouble is with the textile industry, and why, suddenly, it seems to have been affected with paralysis. The Sunday AMERICAN has asked one of New England's leading manufacturers to tell us "what's the matter." His answer will appear in the Sunday AMERICAN exclusively.

LIBERIA BORROWS $2,000,000.

HAMBURG, Germany, July 21.—It is stated here that the international negotiations regarding Liberia have resulted in a $2,000,000 loan to that republic. Germany will participate in the loan.

NO BIG FIGHTS UNTIL THE FALL

By RILEY.

Just at the present there is a lull in the fight game throughout the United States. The majority of the knights of the ropes and mitts are resting up at some quiet sea shore resort or in the mountains until the Fall when they will once again start active training. Of course there will be scraps here and there between the lesser lights, who would be unable to come across with the weekly board bill unless they gathered in a few stray bones from the fistic clubs which keep open during the Summer months.

The promoters here in the East will not be able to offer purses which would tempt the big fellows out until the Fall. If a bout was staged just now between a first class pugilist and would be a pretty difficult proposition to sell tickets for the go at any kind of prices as the fight fans would hate to buy seats for their favorite slugger if they would be sweltering hot.

Though there is no big fight in sight just now, there will be plenty of rumors of matches fixed by enterprising fight managers. This is the time of year that a lot of would-be champions jump into print pretty strong. But by the time that the real campaign has started most of them will have either "got wise" to the fact that they would do better driving a grocery wagon or they will "get theirs" from some "pal" fighter at one of the fistic clubs.

Mitt Artists Resting Up.

At this writing Ad Wolgast is taking things easy with his little wife out on their farm in Cadillac, Mich. Freddie Welsh is enjoying the scenery of the mountains out on the coast. Abe Attell is resting up at his home, Sam Langford is down in Florida inhaling the cigar air of the Arcadian land, Billy Papke is trying hoe to his Illinois farm for a short rest, and so one could continue for an indefinite period, naming fighter after fighter who has laid aside his boxing gloves and training apparatus until the Fall.

The mill between Billy Papke and Sailor Burke over in Gotham on August 8 is the only bout of importance for some time. And this affair is not expected to be a slammer, as Papke is a far better mixer than Burke. Then it is believed that the fur will get cold feet once the "Illinois Thunderbolt" enters into the ring.

The Summer months, however, will not be without its rumors of fights. Such a thing will never happen until fight promoters and managers cease to exist. Even though their charges are enjoying the exhilarating effects of a life of ease at the seashore and mountains, the twentieth century fistic manager is on the job sending out all sorts of challenges. And the promoters are also working overtime making overtures to the headliners in the peanut art. But still the "nothing doing" chance over the door of the majority of prominent fistic clubs throughout the land.

My Kingdom for a "Hope."

By the last of September there will be fights galore. In the first place, a real "white hope" has to be unearthed to beat Johnson. This sounds easier than it really is. Just now it looks as though Jack could defeat all of the prominent white fighters in the space of a few days if given sufficient breathing spells between the bouts. The only man who appears to be anywhere near as good as Johnson is Sam Langford, and if Johnson's actions are to be taken as a criterion of his true feelings toward the Canadian mixer, he got enough of Sam's game when they met over in Chelsea a few years back.

Help! Police! Philadelphia Jack O'Brien claims to be the light heavyweight champion of the world in a statement just issued. Can you beat "Jawn" for the nerve stuff, Jack? Just at present there are about a dozen different species of fighters on the pugilistic horizon who could slip one over on the "Philadelphia Dancing Master" on any of the seven days of the week.

As soon as Joe Woodman, who directs the destinies of Sam Langford, heard of O'Brien's spasm, he came right to bat with a statement in which he declared that Sam is the champion of his class and that if O'Brien thinks that he can stand any of the Tar Baby's game, he can have a match with him any day after posting a forfeit and guarantee of good faith.

Our old friend Al Kaufman is to be resurrected from oblivion. Kaufman has received a flattering offer from Hugh McIntosh to box either Jack Lester or Bill Lang in Sydney, Australia, for a purse of $5,000 as his end of the purse, win, lose or draw. While no date for booking the contest has been named, Kaufman has learned that he will be expected to sail for Sydney in August.

ENGLISH GOLFER IS COMING TO AMERICA

LONDON, July 21.—George Duncan, the British professional golfer of the Haughton Hill Club, Bondon, will sail in September for the United States for an eight weeks' tour. He will visit points in New Jersey and will play pros at Philadelphia, Chicago and New York.

Horse News and Stable Gossip

A colt in training at Rendville that attracts a lot of attention is the two-year-old by Sir Todd, 2:10¾, out of Nantia, 2:17¾, by Arion, 2:07¾. The other morning Dennie Neyland stepped him a mile in 2:32, with the last half in 1:14. The full brother to Owenia, 2:06¾, in Dennie's stable, is one of the best-liked green trotters at the track. He has not bested 2:30 very much at present, but has a way of going about his work that pleases the critical horsemen.

* * *

There are rumors that one of the winners at the meeting at Dover was masquerading under another name.

* * *

Gold Dollar, 2:08¾, one of the sensational trotters of the season, is certainly an old-fashioned bred chap, his dam being by Emerson Golddust, a horse that was foaled way back in 1870. It is curious how that old Morgan blood keeps cropping out in the pedigrees of notable performers.

* * *

Lord Roberts, 2:07¾, the son of Arion, 2:07¾, and Nancy Hanks, 2:04, has added two to his list of 2:30 performers this season.

Adell Rose, 2:08¾, winner of the 2:17 pace at Kalamazoo, is a full sister to the noted race mare Adrelle, 2:04½, that raced so well for Ed Geers a number of years ago.

* * *

The get of Strong Boy, 2:11¾, appear to be just as hard to beat this season as ever. The son of Allandert was called faint hearted when he raced, but his get can certainly go the route and keep coming back.

* * *

The horses from the "tall grass" are certainly picking up their share of the money on the big line so far this season.

CHAMPION GOTCH BEGINS TRAINING

HUMBOLDT, Iowa, July 21.—Gotch's preparation with his trainers for the Hackenschmidt match on Labor Day began yesterday with several hours' work at handball, punching bag, grip machine and hard wrestling. The quarters which have been furnished by the business men of Humboldt in Rickmill's Park are ideally located, giving the men a chance to work beneath the shade of the trees in the open air and giving spectators free opportunity to witness the work.

At present Gotch is doing about fourteen miles of road work in the early morning hours and in the afternoon he finishes off with a light walk. He weighs 214 pounds, which will be reduced to 204 for the match.

Youssuf Hassan, the young Turk who staid two hours and fifteen minutes with Hackenschmidt before being thrown last winter, arrived to stay throughout the Gotch training. He is the only foreigner who will be permitted to help Gotch and is anxious to see him defeat the lion.

DEDHAM CLUB SENDS POLO TEAM TO GANSET

The Dedham Country and Polo Club are sending a team this week to Narragansett Pier. It will be composed of Samuel H. Wolcott, 1; J. Austin Armory, 2; Philip W. Wrenn, 3, and George G. Amory, back. It is practically the same line-up which showed to such advantage in the Dedham Country and Polo Club tourney just ended. Mr. Wolcott taking the place of John P. Bowditch.

CHILDS TEAM IS ONE OF FASTEST

MIDDLEBORO, July 21.—The local baseball fans will be given an assortment of their favorite sport from now on in the way of town teams. Aside from the Trolley League team here, Kenneth L. Childs, who is one of the younger stars in the athletic world, has organized a team and equipped it with suits at his own expense and intends to have the fastest semi-professional team in this section of the State here at all home games.

To-morrow the team will appear in their new outfit and will play the Clinton Parks of Brockton, a fast team in the City League there. All the games will be played on the Nemasket field off North Main street and already much interest is taken in the team. It is planned before the season is over to play a series with the regular Trolley League team for the championship of the town.

On the Childs team the lineup is all local men who have had experience in the game and many of whom have been High School players for the past three years. Belmont, who did such speedy work while at High, will catch and Clark, one of the fastest twirlers about here, will be on the mound.

The bases will be take care of by "Brad" Swift at first, R. Mendall at second and Clough at third, with Wilbert covering inside at short. The outfield will be well covered by Lichford at left, Cushing at centre and Dorman in right.

On Saturday, July 26, this team will run up against Charles Gannet's Makarios of Quincy.

WAITT & BOND BLACKSTONE CIGAR 10c

remains the same and the quality of the cigar is better than ever before.

Of late, Cuba has yielded an unusually small amount of the mild, aromatic tobacco which is up to our standard of selection. Being forewarned, we bought early and secured more than our share of this particularly fine leaf.

As a result, we know that our cigar is as perfect as it can be made, and the response of the smoking public is very gratifying.

By R. W. LARDNER.

The Pirates are in much better humor than when they struck this town. They now have hopes of getting better than even on an Eastern trip that was almost a calamity before they reached Boston. They had split even with the Giants, won three out of four from Brooklyn, and copped four in a row to the Phillies, that made their record for the jaunt five victories and seven defeats.

Their double win from the Rustlers Thursday evened up the score. They now lead only one of the two remaining battles to show a percentage of .500 in the East, if they can take both of them their record will be nine to seven, just about as good as the Cubs are likely to make.

Shy of Effective Pitchers.

Pittsburg is shy of effective pitchers now, but so is Tenney. Letty Leifield and Babe Adams will probably finish up the series here for the Pirates, Lefty pitching this afternoon and Babe tomorrow. As things are going, it will be necessary only for these two gentlemen to hold Boston to six or seven runs. The Rustler pitchers will do the rest.

Saturday's battle will start at 2:45, because both clubs want to catch early trains for the West. The Pittsburgers are due to exhibit at Erie, Pa., on Sunday afternoon, and the Rustlers will open a set in Chicago, Monday. As the rain games are being played in the South, End grounds the tennis should be able to hound these twins if they don't pull out much before midnight.

Fred Hunter was put back at first base Thursday by Manager Clarke, but he didn't last long. Griffith heaved him with a pitched ball in the second inning of the first game. McKechnie then played the bag until Bobby Byrne was benched for kicking in the opening inning of the afterpart. Mac moved to third and Jack Flynn went in at first.

Hans Good At First.

Manager Clarke isn't satisfied with any of his numerous first sackers. He has one on his ball club who can make Chase, Daubert and Gainor jealous. This is none other than Hans Wagner. If Clarke could recover a uniform probably Hans would be shifted to first immediately. He doesn't care much whether he plays there or not. Folks who have seen him perform on that job say he is one of the best that ever happened.

CLEVELAND, July 21.—The Red Sox must win the remaining two games at Cleveland to get an even break on their Western trip. That is their aim now. Before Thursday's battle, they were hoping to have more victories than defeats to show for their journey, but that prospect went up in smoke when they were nosed out in the second battle.

No Fault of Patsy.

It was through no fault of Manager Patsy Donovan that the Boston Red Sox lost the second game of the series with the Naps, 8 to 7. If ever a manager gave a grand exhibition of juggling players, Patsy Donovan is his name.

The Naps went to the front in the third, scoring three runs. The Red Sox scored one in the fifth and jumped all over Mitchell in the sixth, taking the lead by two runs. In their half the Naps got three men on bases and it was Pitcher Mitchell's turn to bat. Manager Stovall picked Lajoie to deliver a hit.

Then and there Donovan made his first move. He yanked Pitcher Page, who had been faltering, and sent in Eddie Cicotte, figuring that the latter might fool the batter with his finger ball. Cicotte sent up one of his choicest fosders, just one, mind you—and it came back at him like a shot from a cannon. It is a mystery why Cicotte's hand, with which he foolishly tried to intercept the ball, did not follow the sphere on out to centre field. The drive caused Butcher and Turner, while Fisher scored a moment later when Cicotte threw wild to first in an attempt to catch Billie, who was substituted to run for Larry, napping.

More Good Work.

In the eighth, with another southpaw, Vean Gregg, pitching for the Naps, Donovan got in some good work. After Wambsganss had been retired Williams and Yerkes both singled. Carrigan was sent to bat for Cicotte, while Thomey was substituted to run for Williams. Carrigan was hit, filling the bases. Thomey easily scored on Billie's momentary fumble of Hooper's grounder, where Williams would probably have been an easy victim at the plate.

Y COBB PAYS $100 FOR BOX AT GAME

CLEVELAND, July 21.—Ty Cobb has bought a $100 box for the Joss family motif game at League Park on Sunday and asked that his name be withheld from publication. E. S. Harmon, chairman of the Joss committee, got Cobb on long-distance telephone and had to coax him to allow his name to be used.

Comiskey bought a box for $100 and a number of others in the baseball world swelled the total to the $2,000 mark.

WOLGAST SIGNS WITH M'FARLAND

CHICAGO, July 21.—Ad Wolgast and Packey McFarland are matched at last, after months and months of bickering. Articles were signed and McFarland's forfeit posted late last night.

The two best boys of their respective weights in the world are to meet in a ten-round engagement at Milwaukee the night of September 18. The weight is to be 133 pounds at 2 o'clock.

Champion Wolgast is to get fifty per cent of the gross gate receipts, while McFarland will receive twenty-eight per cent. The battle is to be held in the Coliseum building, which has a seating capacity of 8,000.

The match was closed at a conference between Frank Melkern, the matchmaker of the Milwaukee club, and Emil Thiry, McFarland's manager.

Melkern came down from Milwaukee with a set of articles, to which Wolgast already had attached his signature. After a talk with Thiry the Milwaukee man signed for the club and Thiry for Packey.

Thiry posted $1,000 with Melkern to guarantee Packey's weight and appearance. Melkern will go to Cadillac and see the champion at his home. Ad has promised to post his $1,000 at once.

IT is rumored around the neighborhood that Miss Emily Morton, the dashing society blonde, and Eaglebeak Spruder, the well-known baseball twirler, are engaged to be married. As far as we know, the date has not yet been set, but it is safe to say that it will not be within the next ten years at least. We lay claim only to being first-class baseball experts. This new piece of gossip comes under the heading of society, but we are compelled to step aside for a few minutes from things baseballistic and do the best we can. First of all, we learned that Devlin of Eaglebeak is tangled up, as he is said to be, he will continue to play baseball as usual.

We are glad to hear that, as the Umpiremen, who, by the way, line up against the Wild Cats again to-day for the last game of their three-game series, would certainly be in Dutch without the famous Mr. Spruder.

Whether or not his pitching will be affected we cannot say, but we would like to beg that when he shows up for this afternoon's game the fans will give him a good time along the lines of first-class kidding. They have the chance of a lifetime.

Although we tried hard, we could not get a line on the two principals of this interesting mixup. As it is out of our line, we do not know whether to call it a tragedy or a comedy.

So far as we know, it might be a joke, but the kid who told us about it did not pull a smile all the time he was reciting his story. Although he did ask us not to print his name, he said nothing about his picture, so in the above space we have dashed off a likeness of him. Any judge of character can tell at a glance whether he is kidding or not.

To-day's game is the last between the Umpiremen and the Wild Cats. If Eaglebeak plays for the Umpiremen there will be nothing to it but the aforesaid team.

However, a lot of things may happen, so we will not take anything for granted and be on the job. Full reports about everything in to-morrow's paper. No doubt we will learn a lot of new dope on the Morton-Spruder engagement this afternoon. That will be all dished up in to-morrow's paper also.

If You Had to Live It Over Again

By DOROTHY DIX

No. 3—The Second Man Tells of Having a Doll Instead of a Woman for a Wife.

"MY married life," said the second man, "has been a failure because I have never had a home, because I have been ruled by the tyranny of tears, because I have had a doll instead of a woman for a wife.

"I fell in love with a pretty, vivacious and charming young girl, and with a man's fatuous folly under such conditions, it never occurred to me to even investigate whether the woman I proposed to make my wife had any domestic training or qualifications. I thought, in my simplicity, that just the act of getting married somehow worked a miracle that turned the flightiest butterfly of a girl into a wise and prudent helpmeet for a man.

"I don't think that I demanded over much of my wife. I wanted just the usual lot of the happily married. I wanted a comfortable, quiet, well-kept home; I wanted children. I wanted a wife who was a companion, who was the chief joy in her family, and was willing to share in all my plans, my hopes, ambitions and struggles.

"On my part I was ready to give her all the honest love of my heart and the best work of my hand. I didn't want to make a slave of her. I wanted her to have all the pretty clothes, all the amusements, all the pleasures that I could possibly give her.

The Servant Problem

"That was the little matrimonial schedule that I had marked out for myself, but it did not take long for my wife to put it out of joint. We went to housekeeping in a beautiful little apartment that I had furnished most artistically, for I have a taste in such matters. And then our troubles began. My wife had been taught nothing of housekeeping, and she did not know whether to order a quarter of beef or a pound, for a roast, hence we were the victim of all sorts of trades people, and our bills were something to turn a man's hair grey in a single night.

"Naturally, also, we were up against the great Servant Problem, and the Lucretia Borgias of every nationality, who murder lamb on stringy roast, and watery potatoes and adamantine pies, passed through our kitchen in a never ending procession.

"At first I was deeply sympathetic with my pretty little wife, and when I would come home and find her curled up on the sofa and the house in a mess, with no cook and no dinner, I would take her in my arms and talk inspired nonsense to her and kiss her little over-manicured fingers and tell her to put on her prettiest frock and we would go out to a smart restaurant to dinner.

"But a man can't live on sentiment alone. Neither can he stay his stomach on antique rugs, no matter how beautiful, nor eat old carved mahogany, though I have been hungry enough many a time to do it. Literally there was never a decent meal in our house, there was never a thing in place, and the apartment always looked as if it had just been struck by a cyclone. And my wife's only excuse was that she was not domestic in her taste and hated housekeeping anyway.

"Our expenses were something frightful, for the energy that my wife failed to apply to her housekeeping she put in on the buying of finery. At first I remonstrated with her, gently and lovingly, explaining to her that I wanted to be generous with her, but that a young man starting out in business could not afford to dress his wife like a millionairess, and that if we ever hoped to get along in the world we must be prudent in our living expenditures, and that she must get less expensive hats, and stop the waste and wreckage of the servants, and look after her end of the partnership as well as I looked after mine.

"Her reply was a burst of hysterical tears and reproaches, and said that would last for days and days. Tears are the coward's weapon with which a little sound woman fights, for she knows that no man has any means of defence against them or any way of hitting back. And then one of a gentleman's jobs is the more chivalrous he is the more he is at her mercy.

"So I lit in two crowded little rooms in a hall bedroom where we panted in semibath in a flo. I ate men with less ability passing me in the race for success, became all my strength and effort on earth to be paying milliners' bills. We have a Pomeranian pup instead of kiddies to pet.

"All my wife's fault? The wreck of all our happiness is to me solely my weakness at bess. If I hadn't been an utmost coward, afraid of a woman's tears, I might have turned the sawdust-stuffed doll that I married into a real woman.

"If I had to live my married life over again I would establish a home, just as I did, and I would force my wife to keep it properly. She was young, and intelligent and healthy, and there was no reason why she shouldn't have learned to cook and manage a home.

What He Would Do

"Instead of coddling her as I did when there was no dinner, I should overwhelm her with my contempt for a woman who had so little sense that she could not do what an ordinary hired girl could. I should task her pride, I should pique her energy, I should use every means I could devise to keep her from degenerating into a lazy loafer.

"Nor should I, if I had to do it over again, let her rule me with her tears. I should ignore them. I would give her what I could afford, and tell her that she can run up bills on the outside that I should refuse to pay, positively refusing her credit.

"And when she went into hysterics over trifles I should never see mine to have out with her, utterly intolerable, in fact. I was so that I could not possibly forget about it. I did not take long before it spread to my shoulders and arms, and I was almost covered with a sort of rash that was maddening and scratching it. I was in such a condition that my hands were bloody.

"A number of physicians were called, but it seemed beyond their skill, or their knowledge to cure me. Having tried numerous remedies without deriving any benefit from them, I had given myself up to the mercy of my dreadful malady, but I thought I would take the Cuticura treatment as a last resort. Words cannot express my gratitude to the one who created The Cuticura Miracles, for I have naught but praise for them, as it was such a miracle as the Cuticura Remedies sent to me by a friend, and now I feel as if I never suffered from eczema. My skin is perfectly clear. The Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and I shall never cease praising the wonderful merits they contain. I will never be without them, in fact, I can almost dare any skin disease to attack me so long as I have Cuticura Remedies in the house." (Signed) C. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold throughout the world, a liberal sample of each, with 32-p. book on the skin, will be sent free, on application to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Dept. 20B, Boston.

WOULD LIE AWAKE ALL NIGHT WITH ITCHING ECZEMA

Terrible Sufferer Ever Since He Can Remember, Utterly Intolerable. Seemed Beyond Medical Power to Cure. "My Disease Was Routed by Cuticura Soap and Ointment."

"I take great pleasure in praising the wonderful Cuticura Cures. Ever since I can remember I was a terrible sufferer of eczema, and other irritating skin diseases. I would be awake all night, and my suffering was intolerable. A scaly blotter settled on my back, and being but a child, I naturally scratched it. It was a burning, itching sensation, utterly intolerable, in fact. It was so that I could not possibly forget about it. It did not take long before it spread to my shoulders and arms, and I was almost covered with a sort of rash that was maddening and scratching it. I was in such a condition that my hands were bloody.

Married Life the Second Year

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

In Which Warren Takes Helen for a Car Ride on a Very Hot Night.

"I BELIEVE it's cooler in the dining room than here. We can open the hall door and get a breeze through."

"It isn't cool anywhere, and this apartment's the limit. There's no ventilation in these rooms at all; they're jammed right up against that brick wall. We'll not stay here another Summer, I can tell you that."

"But, dear, this is unusually hot weather, we've never had it like this."

"Yes, but this place is insufferable, it's hotter than my office, and that's bad enough. Get on your things and we'll go for a car ride. I'm not going to swelter here all evening."

"But dear, what about Winifred?"

"Have Mrs. O'Grady come up and stay with her."

Helen hesitated. She disliked leaving her with the janitor's wife, and yet it was too hot to drag her around a night like this.

"Well, if you want to stay you can, but I'm going out. You've been cooped up here all day, I should think you'd like to get a little air."

"Oh, you know I would, I'd love to; I was only thinking about Winifred."

"Well, get Mrs. O'Grady. She's glad to sit here a couple of hours for 50 cents."

All Cars Crowded

Helen telephoned down to Mrs. O'Grady, who came up at once.

"Where shall we go?" asked Warren, when a little later they reached the street. "Take the car to Riverside?"

"Oh, that would be lovely!"

"All right, here comes a car."

But the car was crowded, there was not a seat and several were standing.

"No use trying to get on there, we'll have to wait for the next."

But the next was even more crowded. Warren swung his cane impatiently. "That's the trouble in trying to get anywhere in Boston, you always have to go with the rabble."

"Wait, dear, maybe there'll be some seats on the next one," said Helen, hopefully.

It was several minutes before another came. There were just two seats on the rear platform. Two workmen in their shirt sleeves and a colored boy were the other occupants.

"But it isn't so bad, dear," said Helen. "You really do get a better view on the back seat than anywhere in the car, and it's cool back here."

Warren hung his hat on his cane and ran his hand through his hair.

"It's better than that stuffy apartment, Helen, we've really got to get out of there. I meant what I said. I'm not going to spend another Summer in that place."

"But, Warren, where can we go? We can't get anything else for what we are paying there."

"Why can't we? There are plenty of apartments in Boston."

"Oh, do wait, dear, for just one more. Here it comes now. You see, they're running these cars."

But it, too, was crowded, and there was a mad rush for the one vacant seat.

"Come on!" Warren started off. "It's no use hanging around here. Look at that mob of people. They'd fill a dozen cars."

He strided angrily on ahead. They waited on the corner. At length another car came toward them. Warren stepped to the side of the track, but it changed on without stopping.

"Why on earth didn't he stop? They've got to stop at this corner."

"Oh, never mind, dear, here comes another."

Passed Without Stopping

Warren shook his cane at this one, but it, too, passed without stopping.

By this time he was boiling with rage. "Perhaps they don't stop here, Hedu't we better go back and get one," suggested Helen timidly.

"No, we'll get one right here! This is the right corner—the place they have to stop. I'll stop the next car or know the reason why!"

As the next one approached Warren started forward to stand himself in the middle of the track, when the car drew up on the other corner, and they were forced to make an undignified rush to get on.

"What on earth is the matter with you fellows?" Warren sputtered, as he gave the conductor change. The car was whizzed by me without stopping. You're supposed to stop on the far corner—why don't you do it?"

The conductor shrugged his shoulders indifferently, and rang up the fares without deigning any answer.

"By George! I'll report that insolent fellow! These conductors are a lot of blamed ruffians. If I had my way I'd fire nine-tenths of them."

Helen said nothing, fearing she would only irritate him more. And he rode the rest of the way in sullen silence.

And as Helen stood out into the street, she asked herself why must so many of their outings end like this? Why was he so easily irritated? Why did he spoil so much of their pleasure in this way?

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

REFUSE HIS INVITATIONS

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Please give your opinion of a young man who takes a young woman, with whom he is keeping company, out early Sunday afternoon to the beach, and although they do not return until nine or ten o'clock that night, he never offers her any refreshment other than soda.

My own opinion is that he should invite her to supper. He earns a fair salary, and as his people are well off, very little money is required of him at home.

He calls frequently and has always been well received at the young woman's home and dined there.

Please advise the young woman.

A WELL WISHER.

OF course I can not say what the young man's reasons are for not making the day more pleasant; but from his actions, I should judge that he is not accustomed to thinking of other people's comforts.

By refusing his invitation once or twice you may cause him to be more anxious to please you in the future.

IN THE MAN'S PLACE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

About a month ago I had occasion to visit a doctor and fell deeply in love with him. He is seventeen years my senior. I am nineteen. I have seen him several times. I love him dearly, although he is old enough to be my father. He doesn't know of my love for him.

Advise me, Miss Fairfax, how can I show my love. How can I tell him? Is it best for me to tell him that I love him, or shall I wait for him to tell me first? CONSTANCE.

MY dear girl, wait and see if by avoiding this man you do not forget him and become interested in someone else.

It is always a man's place to make the advances, and in taking any decided step you not only would appear in a very false light but might also sacrifice any friendly feeling he has toward you.

IS NOT NOTICE IT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am twenty-one years old and deeply in love with a girl three years my junior. I have known her for five years and am sure she returns my love.

About three months ago she made the acquaintance of a certain young woman and since then has grown cold to me. She just bows when she sees me.

I feel badly over it and would thank you to advise me. E. A.

I FEEL certain she has not forgotten you.

In this abrupt manner. She has become interested in this other young girl, but her friendship for you cannot have been changed on this account.

It is better not to show disappointment. Pretend to have noticed no change. There is only some little reason for her behavior, which is likely to be cleared up if you pay no attention to it.

However, I would like to hear how it all turns out and how you succeed with your affair.

YOU'LL GROW TO LIKE HER

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I respect and admire a young woman very much, but do not love her. I believe she loves me. Would it be a sin to marry her?

Please advise me. H. H.

THERE can be no better foundation for a future happiness than respect and admiration for the woman you wish to make your wife.

Marriage is successful where compatibility of mind and purpose exists.

I believe you will grow to like this young woman and, as the years go by, your affection will increase.

The Vanity Box

TO-DAY'S INSTALMENT

By ALICE STUYVESANT

Copyright, 1910, 1911, by Desdemona, Page & Co.

"IF very sorry, madam, if I broke the news too abruptly," said Dodson.

"We all thought you ought to know, and would wish to be told, and I hoped by waiting till after dinner——"

"Yes, yes; I'm sure Mrs. Ricardo will think you did right," Terry reassured him. "The brandy, please, as quickly as possible."

By the time the butler had returned with a decanter Maud was so much herself again that curiosity had conquered horror. She thought it rather hard-hearted of Terry to take the hideous news so quietly, for long ago she and Milly Heyward had been intimate friends. Poor Milly! Dead! She could not make it seem true, and said so. Milly was not at all the sort of woman to be murdered. And that afternoon! No, it couldn't, couldn't be true. It was hardly decent.

"Drink this, dear," said Terry, so gently that to Maud her voice sounded cold. After all, she thought, Southern women felt far more than others. The mellow old brandy did Maud good. Her heart grew warm again, and her tongue was loosed.

"Tell us everything, Dodson," she directed, as the butler lingered uncertainly, not certain whether it was desirable to go, or wait to be dismissed. "Are you sure some one hasn't made up a horrible cock and bull story?"

"Only too sure, Madam. Everybody knew already. Jennings heard the news at Riding St. Mary. He'd taken some letters to post, from the servants' hall——"

"I don't care why he went. Who told him?"

"It was all over the village, madam. Mrs. Barnard, from the home farm at Riding Wood, had sent a man on her bicycle for the doctor and the police."

"Why Mrs. Barnard?" asked Maud, who had no idea of fainting now.

"It seems, madam, that Sir Ian Herd ward himself found the body, and came down to the farm looking for Barnard, who used to serve under him, if you remember, sir."

It struck Maud that Terry's arm around her waist became suddenly rigid, like a bar of iron, then relaxed. Well then! But she was too intensely excited to think much about Terry just then.

"Sir Ian found her—dead! How dreadful!"

"I believe he got anxious because her ladyship didn't return from a walk, and went out to look for her."

Turned to Stare

Mrs. Ricardo leapt into the loosened girdle of Terry's arm, and turned to stare at her.

"Oh!" she gasped, shuddering. "You were at the house, waiting for her, and all the while she was lying murdered. Now you mustn't faint, Terry!"

"I won't faint," the other answered, in a dull, tired tone. "Don't think about me."

"I can't think about anybody or anything but Milly," said Mrs. Ricardo, entirely unconscious that she was thinking mostly about herself. "Oh, how it frightens me. It makes one feel as if we were all murdered. Dodson, have they an idea who did it?"

"No, madam." Dodson answered reluctantly. "There was robbery. Her ladyship's jewelry was taken. I understand; her rings, and a brooch, all her money and the gold case she was in the habit of carrying——"

"Oh, poor Milly! Her vanity box! She always had it dangling from her wrist. I suppose some wretched tramp must have seen it."

"Tramps don't generally have revolvers, madam, that's the queer part; and from what Jennings hears, her ladyship met her death from a revolver shot. They're saying in the village already, it would appear, that there's more than meets the eye."

"Oh, it must have been a tramp!" exclaimed Terry. It was the first time that she had broken out impulsively, since the news came.

"In any case, the police are searching the woods," announced Dodson, "but will go hard if they don't hit on some clue."

"Sir Ian must have gone to look for her, after you left Friars' Moat," said Maud, turning again to Terry, to be once more repelled by the frozen, far-away look which she could not help resenting as selfish.

"Yes," Terry replied, as if mechanically. "What time did they find out?" Mrs. Ricardo went on.

"Poor Sir Ian"

"I don't know exactly, madam. Between five and six, I believe; but they say the poor lady had been dead more than an hour then."

"What have—they done with her—with the body? But, oh, how awful, Terry, to be speaking of poor Milly as a body!"

"They would have carried her home, I should say, madam," the butler volunteered an opinion.

"Poor sir Ian!" mourned Mrs. Ricardo. "I will almost kill him. And to think of his being there with—with his murdered wife, alone. How he will miss Eric Forestier! He has no intimate friends since Eric died. I wish Norman were here."

"Yes," said Terry.

I'LL LURE THE WHOPPER TO SHORE WITH THE FAKE WIRELESS I'LL ARRANGE THE CAPTURE ON BOARD AND I MUST HAVE A CRACKER
YES CAPTAIN, THAT IS THE CUR DESMOND I WAS TRIED TO STEAL HIS FEET BY MY FRIEND CLAUDE ME OUGHT TO DO

Even the sailors of the "Whopper" are aware of the crimes of Desmond. Claude Eclaire can identify him, the jackass presents a short shrift for the scoundrel. Rosamond, who has suffered so much from the villainies of Desmond, hastens to assure the crew that they, indeed, have Desperate Desmond in their power. It is a bad moment for the archcriminal.

It goes against the grain of the sailors to end the wicked life of even such a notorious outlaw as Desmond, but they protest that it is their duty and they propose to do it. Duty is less repugnant to most people when it involves vengeance to others only. So, the criminal is safe and sound in the safe tumbled overboard. The sea will keep its secret.

The feelings of desperate Desmond inside the safe can only be imagined. He is cool enough, at least, as he sinks in the depths of the sea.

But the past life of the unfortunate wretch has been such that he deserves no sympathy. On the bottom of the sea is a large-sized safe that is the final resting place of its unscrupulous occupant.

We see that the turtle looks but little perturbed after all. Thanks to its enormously strong shell, the fall did not injure it. This shows us the danger of leaving too thin-shelled turtles in a place where a turtle is merely tickled. So with the safe on its back, the turtle quietly crawls ashore on the nearest island, where it promptly dies. The safe-cracker, in "doing time."

It is a simple job for the safe-cracker to open the safe of the "Whopper," but instead of treasure he finds Desmond. He discovers a greater criminal than himself, for Desmond is the master mind of those without the pale of the law. It is a glad meeting between these two, for each is a prisoner to be aided by the other. An alliance of wrongs.

How is the villain to get within reach of Claude and the beautiful Rosamond, who are aboard a fast mail steamer? After a moment of deep thought, "I'm the boss," cries Desperate Desmond. He sees the wireless apparatus, and knowing the "Whopper" will answer a call for help, he trusts to a wireless appeal to bring her within reach. And then? Something doing to-morrow.

He Had Told It Before

The Coffee Broker's Story Wasn't New

By KENNETT HARRIS

THE Coffee Broker waddled over to where the Civil Engineer was standing in happy solitude and sank ponderously into a big leather rocker beside him. It was evident that the Coffee Broker had something on his mind, and the Civil Engineer instinctively looked at his watch.

"I see Buckholdens have gone to smash," remarked the Coffee Broker, crossing one fat leg over the other and lighting a cigarette.

"So I hear," assented the Civil Engineer, knocking the ashes from his pipe and looking around the room.

"Talking of smashes reminds me of a little incident that occurred in our suburban tin other day," said the Coffee Broker, in his big voice. "It struck me as rather pathetic," he added.

"It must have been," the Civil Engineer agreed.

The Coffee Broker ignored the mild sarcasm. "It was," said he. "It was another sort of smash. An old Dutch woman who peddles vegetables tied her horse up near the edge of a steep bank while she went into the house with a truck of potatoes, and the horse got to fretting at the flies, and pretty soon it reared back and fell over the bank and broke its neck. Tough luck, eh?"

"Too bad," said the Civil Engineer.

What She Did

"It was all of that," declared the Coffee Broker, emphatically. "You see, she was a pretty old woman," he went on, "and the horse was about all she had in the world, except the wagon and the little garden patch that she cultivated. She just made a living out of that patch—a living for herself and a kid grandson—and that was all. The kid helped in the garden a little, but he couldn't do very much, as the old lady was sending him to school.

"Day in and day out, that poor old thing would be up at dawn, hoeing and raking and weeding and watering, and then she'd load the wagon, put on a clean check apron and drive in with her beets and beans and turnips and what-not. And here was the horse lying with its neck broken—the horse that she depended on for her plowing and cultivating and hauling. It wasn't any twenty-cents-on-the dollar proposition like Buckholdens. It was ruin, out and out. Now, that's what I call pathetic. I don't make any pretensions to being sentimental, but I call that a mighty pathetic case."

It Was Fierce

"Fierce!" agreed the Civil Engineer, looking at his watch again. "I suppose you haven't seen Sweeney? If he doesn't show up pretty soon I'll have to be moving. How's the market this morning?"

"Strong," answered the Coffee Broker, shortly. "I was standing close by," he resumed, "and I said to myself it was up to me to do something. I saw what you'd call a sentimental man, but it struck me as a pathetic thing."

"It was," said the Civil Engineer, pushing his chair back. "Well, I've got to go. Something must have kept Sweeney."

"There was a crowd around, of course," the Coffee Broker went on serenely. "They were saying 'Fierce!' and 'Too bad!' but they weren't doing anything. Now, I ain't sentimental; I'm practical, and it struck me as a practical man that something had to be done. I didn't say anything. I ain't one of the talking kind. I just went over to the livery stable and I bought a horse and I hitched the horse up to the vegetable wagon and told the old lady it was a present to her."

The Coffee Broker puffed out his cheeks and leaned back in his chair with a thumb in the armhole of his waistcoat.

"Very creditable to you," murmured the Civil Engineer, absent-mindedly.

"Oh, I don't take any particular credit for it," said the Coffee Broker. "Something had to be done. I don't mean to say that I've got money to throw to the birds, but I'm only human and I thought they were doing about as much as could be expected if they threw a dollar into the hat, but I just concluded I'd buy the old lady out; so I bought the horse and paid for it out of my own pocket, and if you'd seen that old feathery face working and twitching and the tears of joy in the faded blue eyes, you'd have thought I'd got the worth of my money."

"You've got more than the worth of your money," said the Civil Engineer. "It's worth forty or fifty dollars to be able to tell a story like that on one's self to say nothing of the virtuous glow. How did that glow feel to you when it first struck in? Great experience, eh?"

"Tell It to Sweeney

The Coffee Broker's broad face reddened. "You must think it's the first time I ever did a charitable action," he sputtered. "It seemed to me that you rather conveyed that impression, old man," answered the Civil Engineer, mildly.

"It struck me as a pathetic incident," said the Coffee Broker, with indignation. "I thought you would be interested."

"I was when I heard you tell it to that bunch in the library, the day before yesterday," replied the Civil Engineer. "Since then I've caught fragments of it several times as you repeated it to others, and still yet and again others have repeated it to me. The house committee is considering the propriety of having it engrossed on vellum and framed and hung where you can point to it."

At the door the Civil Engineer paused and looked back. "If Sweeney comes in, you can tell it to him," he said.

THE TRUTH AT LAST

"I've asked you three times to marry me, and you've refused. Do you think that's fair?"

"Yes—to the man I'm engaged to."

The Gun Runner

A Thrilling Story of Wireless and War

Synopsis of Preceding Instalments

GUSTAV LINGG, wireless operator on the steamer Lauinian, goes ashore for a stroll while his ship is loading at her dock in New York and becomes lost when a dense fog swoops on from the bay. On a side street he meets a beautiful young woman, whom he has never seen before and who calls him by name. "I want to talk with you," she says. "I insist on it."

Lingg, amazed, stares at her bookish face for a moment and then turns and does as he is told. He goes a long way in this manner. At a ferry whistle tells him that he is nearing the river, he enters a narrow street, only to find his way blocked by a cab, a cab with an open door.

In the cab sits the woman from whom he had fled. "I wanted to warn you," she says, and rushes him enter the cab.

"Of what?" he asks, as the cab starts.

"Not to sail on the Lauinian."

He asks why not and she replies that it will not be safe. He apparently doubts her and she seeks with him to prove it. She asks him to kiss her, and as he draws away from her, throws her arms around his neck. In the midst of his struggles the door of the cab opens and a man drags him into the street. A crowd gathers and a policeman appears, who begins clubbing his assailants. Then another man appears, who flings off the policeman and puts the dazed operator back into the cab, telling out to the driver:

"To the police station, straight!"

The man who had attacked the operator then tells the horrified policeman that the man who has just driven off in the cab with Lingg is a traitor, and that the woman is also in the secret service.

The scene changes to the deck of the steamship Lauinian. A big-shouldered man in a pilot coat wants to send a message, but the operator tells him the wireless apparatus is out of order and that he can't do any sending until he fixes it.

The captain calls in the operator to hurry up and get his apparatus in shape through the mist can be seen an approaching warship. The man in the raincoat paces the deck, his face distorted by the glance in at the wireless apparatus. He finally flies a couple of messages with the operator, signing them Michael Duffy.

The next day the man hangs around the wireless cabin again, and asks if there have been any replies to his message. The operator explains to him the workings of the wireless system and the stranger says he wants to send a message to New Orleans to inquire when a shipment of oil and mill shafting left that port.

The stranger inquires about the warship and the operator says she is the cruiser Cadena, off Porto Rico, having been ordered south on account of the Colombian trouble.

"Ever made this trip before?" asks the stranger.

"Never on this tub," is McKinnon's reply.

McKinnon confides in the stranger that he is working on an invention, but that he needs more money and he has to go slow.

TO-DAY'S INSTALMENT

"WE'VE got to take that as it comes."

McKinnon said with an unlooked-for placidity of tone. Then he leaned back, with half-closed eyes, and linked his long forefingers together behind his head.

"You see, I can always save money on a consarnsh run like this; there's no way of getting rid of it."

"Well, money's worth having now and then," the stranger remarked as his eagle ruminative eye fell on the little varnished box that held the wireless responder.

He was silent for a moment or two, though McKinnon watched him closely out of his half-shut eyes. Then the stranger swung slowly about and touched the operator on his soiled shirt-sleeve. McKinnon took the heavy receiver on his arm, but he did not move.

"See here," said the stranger, and both his voice and his expression had undergone some quick and pregnant change, "see here; if you want to make ten times what you get out of this key operating business you only want to make a good round sum helping me out of a hole?"

The Lauinian's operator looked closely at the man who had breathed his offer to him. He had apparently been afraid of some such undercurrent of self-interest in the other's advances.

He seemed to possess the man of thought's persistent horror of material and compelling alliances; he seemed to feel that some secret web of inveiglement had been woven about him.

"How could I help you out of a hole?" he curtly demanded.

The stranger did not answer at once. The other's suddenly aroused suspicion had warned him to go soon. Instead of speaking he leaned back to the steamer chair and studied his companion. The path before him seemed a precarious one.

His pursed up lips worked slowly in and out as he sat there lumpishly. There was something suggestive of the ruminant in his large and heavy silence.

"Could we talk here as one man to man?" he finally asked, with a look at the door.

"Of course we can," the operator retorted, settled in the sense of mystery the other was conjuring up about so simple a situation. The vague feeling of irritation seemed to merge into something that was almost anger as he watched the stranger slowly rise to his feet and cross over to the cabin door, hold both against the wall plate by his ponderous bulk.

He lifted the end of the hook on his toe and let the front door swing shut with the slow dip of the steamer's deck. Then he duffed out the faded denim curtain and came back and sat down. The two men continued to look at each other guardedly.

"I've got a hard job ahead of me," began the intruder, seeming to feel his way as he went. "A hard job—and you're the only man on this ship who can help me along."

"Go on," McKinnon commanded with an impatient wave of his hand, but his eyes never left the other's face.

"That's just it. I'll be hanged if I know how to go on!" the other explained. He gave vent to a guttural laugh of uneasiness and sat stroking his pendulous, turkey-cock throat.

The operator, drumming on his pine table-edge, sulked in silence. The other again was also silent. The pulse and throb of the engines crept into the white-walled cabin.

"Well," said McKinnon with a significant glance toward his large and authoritative silver watch. The stranger's eye, following the pause, saw the hour-hand, and then on again to the bells wires.

The Message

"You may recall that you sent a couple of messages out for me this afternoon," he finally began.

McKinnon recalled the fact of the two dispatches.

"Maybe you happen to remember the wording of those two particular messages?"

McKinnon, with wrinkled brow, turned to his memorandum. He read it over carefully, and straightened them out on his knee. Then he looked up to say: "I never hold much things in my head. You know. We can't any more than a wireless."

He let his gaze run over the sheets of paper once more, the other intently not watching him as he read. For just a moment, as he made note of what seemed the operator's half-perplexed and half-scornful indifference, a shadow of disappointment flitted across his face, typifying apparently, some passing regret for a confidence he had recognized as unnecessary.

But he pulled himself together at once as though determined to face the proposition unflinchingly before him.

"Would you mind reading that first message to me?" he asked with the placid authority of a prefrightened sure of his trick.

McKinnon rattled through the message at a breath. "Varrel, ship, Wall Street, New York. Have taken on board Lauinian, bound Puerta Lacondita. Wire Washington. Will have him held to wait instructions. DUFFY."

The operator put the message on the table and calmly weighed it with his cumbersome lock. The other man scowled and frowned, and one of McKinnon's attitudes of unmoved neutrality, how automatic the human mind can become, how often once learned is the method of doing a thing it can lose all sense of the thing itself.

The man of the key had seen nothing but a string of words to be "sent." It was only too apparent that their meaning had escaped him.

To Be Continued To-morrow

Temptations of Housewives

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

DOES a man know that from the time his wife says good-bye to him in the morning till she opens the door to let him in at night she is constantly assailed by temptation? He laughs when she is safe and safe in her home, little dreaming that she is surrounded by temptations as irresistible as those which surround the unhappy man when he enters a saloon, and that these longings attack her at every turn in her household duties.

She decides to clean the pantry, and after removing all the china, spreads out a newspaper to put on the shelves, and her eyes are attracted by a love story.

"Oh, Lillian, Lillian," Cynthia's love rich voice shook with emotion. Birney Gates turned his head in her direction and met her eyes. Curious gold green eyes they were, shadowed by long black lashes—languorous and enticing. For one moment he gazed as if under a sudden spell. Later the girl dropped her fan and he stooped to pick it up. As he handed it back his fingers touched hers and the contact thrilled him strangely."

Isn't that more tempting than wiping off sugar bowls, soap plates and porridge pots, and is it any wonder that everything is forgotten while the reader perches on the stepladder, or the pantry shelf, or the handle of the broom if it is more convenient, and follows the fortunes of Cynthia to the end?

The Thrilling Love Story

She decides to dust the parlor, and picks up a magazine, and fifteen minutes later she wouldn't know it if the fire department passed the house, for she is engrossed in the sufferings of some pale maid whose fate in consulting her by marry a man she doesn't love.

If she is what foolish young women regard these days as well read she is pursuing at least ten continued stories through the newspapers and magazines, and her brain is filled with romantic bosh. Once a week her anxiety is relieved regarding the fate of Arminin, or the safety of the pearl with Louise and her millionaire lover on board, and likewise, but multiplied, she is carrying the romantic careers of a dozen monthly magazine heroes and heroines in her head.

She strings the beans thirty minutes late because she just had to find out if Alexander stayed in Paris with Maude, or went to London with Agnes, and the potatoes are not put over according to the time table because a love scene in Rome was more thrilling. If she gets too much pepper in the pens, she was thinking of the man who has Imogene in his power and she shook the box, and all through the day everything that is delayed, or overdone, or underdone, or not done at all, owes its origin to her enthralling interest in a love story, for love not only makes the world go 'round, but the reading of it turns things topsy-turvy.

She Doesn't Realize

When she has read every instalment in the eight or ten serials with which she is clogging up her brain, what has she gained? Perhaps she has temporarily forgotten the heat or some kindred worry, but she has put nothing in her head that will last or that will do it any good.

She has done nothing but kill time, the greatest of all crimes, since life is short and there is so much to accomplish and so much to learn.

She is living her own love story, and doesn't realize that when she wastes time in reading of Reginalds and Chaunceys and dukes and lords, she is anything but the brave, strong woman she demands her book heroines to be, and that she is swapping her hero in real life by filling her brain with false standards, and making him wait for dinner because it took three pages for Lionel to propose.

She can't read and come back to household duties with satisfaction with her life, for when a woman reads a love story industriously she puts herself in the heroine's place, and her pantry shelf becomes a seat on a yacht or a throne and her kitchen dress assumes the texture of the girl in the book.

She forgets soap, starch, pies and brooms. She forgets so much that is practical and useful that the serial love story should be quarantined against unless the woman who reads is strong enough to resist the temptation to read it when more important things await.

The Manicure Lady

She Tells the Head Barber About Etiquette at Court

"I SEEN in the paper where Mister John Hays Hammond nudged the King on the elbow the other day," said the Manicure Lady.

"What about it?" asked the Head Barber.

"Oh, nothing much," said the Manicure Lady, "only I didn't think anybody could approach the King at all. The dispatches said that all the society spasms there was shocked at the awful breach of etiquette, but the dispatches went on to say that the King seemed to like being nudged. I guess, after all, George, that King is a pretty good fellow. They are surely human, and it must be great to be treated like humans once in a while.

"The only kings in history that was worth while has been named George," was the proud declaration of the Head Barber.

"Even if what you say was the truth which it ain't, that wouldn't prove anything, George," replied the Manicure Lady. "You know, as well as I do, that most of them earlier kings were a total loss, and it is only since the world got better and sent a few head-rearing off the block, it is only since then that the kings is getting half decent.

The Awful "Nicotine"

"How do you mean, head rearing off the block?" demanded the Head Barber.

"I mean the electine, sir," said the Manicure Lady. "The electine that dread fat instrument of sudden death that they all used in the French Revolution and the Fifteenth, or whatever was his number, thought that he could run the people of Eastern Prussia as long as he was able to, and what was the answer? The Eastern Prussians got busy and they took him to the nicotine and chopped off his head with a Iris Speaker chopping off a three-base hit. Maybe it might have been kind of bloody and merciless to see a king's head rolling down into a basket, but, somehow, I don't think there's something wholesome about it, don't you?"

"I don't see anything wholesome about it," said the Head Barber, "any more than I think it is wholesome to see fellows strapped into a chair or sent to State Prison for life.

"Well, anyhow," said the Manicure Lady, "I was starting out to say, Mister John Hays Hammond nudged the King. That doesn't seem like a terrible offense, does it, George to us barbershop Bostonians? I guess if the king were get onto a camel from 10 to 2:30 p. m. he wouldn't mind a little thing like being nudged. Goodness knows, George, that I get nudged to death every night of my life when I take one of them crowded trains.

Wilfred a Poem

"What I started out to say was that Wilfred is writing a poem which he expects to send to John Hays Hammond the minute that gent gets back to the United States. This is now it goes:

"I nudged the King! The moon stood still. The hard rain ceased to patter.
The angels grew hush'd as the bell
And to the Arctic regions chill
Tropical birds were heard to sing
I nudged the King!

Those Girls

PROFESSOR FRANK P. TURNER of Dunwiddy College, was talking at a dinner party about the girl graduate.

"The girl graduate, with her clear eyes, her pink cheeks and her supple figure in its white gown, is indeed a sight for the gods. Mentally, too, she is delightful.

"It is false to believe that a girl graduate are like a certain politico's daughter. She, a short time after her graduation, said:

"Papa is so capitalist.

"How so?' asked a friend.

"Why, after my graduation exercises came he still insists on writing his own speeches."

ANOTHER FOSS SHOE MESSAGE

Governor Foss to-day sent in a second message to the Legislature on the Shoe Machinery situation.

It is clear," says the Governor, "that the present statute in no way provides either for the elimination of monopoly or punishment of its promoters. It manifestly is intended not to provide any remedy for such a situation as that which I have outlined, but merely to provide a method of discovering whether a monopoly exists.

The Governor further says: "Either the law as it stands is insufficient or the law officers of the Commonwealth are derelict and are remiss in the performance of their duty."

The Governor declares that there is plainly evidence sufficient to warrant the belief in existence in the State of a monopoly of shoe machinery, the operation of which is serious, seriously to menace the public interests.

ALASKA HOT SPELL MELTING GLACIERS

VALDEZ, Alaska, July 21.—The hot spell continues in this vicinity, and the glaciers are melting at a phenomenal rate, converting the glacial streams into torrents. Creek that for years have been dry for forty feet of glide, inundating four blocks in the south of the town.

UNCONSCIOUS FROM GAS.

James Mulready, forty-nine, was found unconscious to-day in the bedroom of his home of Mrs. Conway, No. 23 Marcella street, East Cambridge, when he became. The woman smelled gas and broke in the door. Mulready is believed to have left a cigar from the gas jet and to have accidentally blown out the flame. He was taken to the Cambridge Relief Hospital, where it is said he will recover.

AMERICANS IN PERIL IN HAYTI

PORT AU PRINCE, Hayti, July 21.—President Simon, the Cabinet, the Diplomatic Cabinet and the remnant of his army are in this city to-day in broken and demoralized condition. They arrived here as fugitives on the German ship Seeis, which took them aboard at Port Haytien after they had been routed in the rebel country.

Simon regime is believed to be virtually at an end, and it is predicted that by the next few hours will see the appointment of an exiled fugitive as the supporters of the first deserting him and the cause of Simon is gaining strength hourly. He will probably decide to Jamaica.

Port au Prince is the only city now left in Simon and the rebels will probably be in that soon. The entire northern end of the country is in their possession, and the rebel bands of them are sweeping practically all before them, carrying all before them.

Reports from Cape Haytien to-day state that the people of that city are in a state of hordes of armed blacks are parading the streets after having looted other towns, and are threatening to attack the foreign consulates, which have given refuge to American and other foreign women.

The yacht American, owned and commanded by Rear R. Dick, a New York broker, is reported to be still standing off Port Haytien, threatening to fire on the rebels with guns with which she is equipped on the deck, if any attempt is made to attack the consulates.

Mr. Dick has given refuge on his yacht to all Americans that the vessel will accommodate. Within an hour after American can vessels will have arrived in Haytien waters to reinforce the British and Cuban patrol, the only one that is stationed here.

The cruiser Chester and the gunboat Des Moines and the gunboat Peoria have been ordered here.

The German and Italian ministers have appealed to their governments to send warships at once to protect their subjects, and both France and England unless the non-arrival of warships here soon changes conditions are to-day, the country is in a state of absolute anarchy.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS

NEW YORK, July 21.—After a little opening irregularity, the stock market turned strong to-day and prices of nearly all the active railroad issues made substantial early gains. Great Northern preferred and Northern Pacific had soon made increases of a point each. Union Pacific gained ¾, while Reading, Erie and Southern Pacific also moved up.

Resumption of aggressive buying of Canadian Pacific soon drove the price of that issue up 1¾. The general market list moved comparatively neglected. B. R. T. monopolized the attention and soon doubled, while Interborough-Metropolitan, after opening off ¾, soon recovered that loss. Few industrial issues were irregular in their action. Among the sporting features were the following: Steel common is, Pennsylvania 3, Atchison ¾, Canadian Pacific 1¼ and Union Pacific ¾. Reading was off an eighth at the opening.

The London market opened irregular. Standard Oil was quoted at 658 bid and 660 asked. American Tobacco was 350 bid, 390 asked.

The market for American issues continued extremely narrow in London, but they contributed the smallest advance. Covering was in progress there in Canadian Pacific.

CHAMBER PARTY IN PRAGUE NEXT

DRESDEN, July 21.—The Boston Chamber of Commerce party, which is touring Europe to get ideas how to make civic and trade improvements in their own city, is now in Dresden, capital of the kingdom of Saxony, located on both sides of the River Elbe. This is famed as one of the most beautiful cities of the world.

To-morrow the party goes to Prague.

The Bostonians are gathering facts about the various public improvements, and are especially interested in the local suburban development. During the second week spent in this old historical community is the Brühl Terrau, a shaded promenade which overlooks the Elbe. The element of the city metropolis of New England pronounces it the finest thing of the kind they have yet seen in Europe.

The party has visited the municipal abattoirs to-day, and afterwards went to the royal palace, where they were shown the famous "Green Vaults." The receptacle of treasures contains one of the finest and most costly collections of jewels in exist-ence.

After that the tourists went to the Johannesum and inspected a wonderful collection of paintings. The museum is also filled with articles which inspire infinite interest in the visitor. To-day will mark a trip into Saxon Switzerland.

The Boston visitors were here Wednesday night and a special concert in its honor was given at the Belvedere, which is Dresden's most famous restaurant. Among the numbers on the program were American patriotic airs.

Yesterday the Bostonians visited the International Exposition of Hygiene, which are displayed exhibits from all over the world, illustrating the most modern ideas in dealing with industrial hygienic problems.

The Bostonians have also visited the Dresden picture gallery. This is in a class with the Louvre in Paris, which is regarded by most art critics as the finest gallery of art in the world.

Among the famous paintings in the Dresden gallery is Raphael's Sistine Madonna. This is a picture beyond price.

GOV. FOSS SIGNS THE "L" BILLS

Governor Foss to-day signed the Boston Elevated and West End consolidated bills and the subway lease and tunnel construction measures.

The first mentioned measure ends the controversy over the merger of the Boston Elevated and the West End roads.

The tunnel bills provide for the construction of subways from a Park square to the South Station, under Boylston street; from South Boston to Dorchester, and for an extension of the East Boston tunnel from Scollay to Bowdoin Square.

The consolidation of the West End and the Boston Elevated roads are given until September 15 next to vote approval of the merger under the Tinkham bill, signed to-day.

Under the terms of the lease bill the Boston Elevated will pay the annual rent for leases them to the Boston Elevated for 999 years. Provision is made for the end of the time the bill provides that a board of arbitrators, consisting of three members and presided by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, shall assert to find out if the lease shall be renewed.

Governor Foss to-day signed seven bills in addition to the West End consolidation-subway lease bills. These include the bills increasing the salaries of the Probate and Superior Court judges. He signed the bill which provides for the railroad commissioners to begin an investigation at once of the overcrowding of cars in the Boston Subways. The bills signed were:

A bill to increase the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court from $6,000 to $10,000 a year, and that of the Chief Justice from $8,500 to $10,500.

A bill to increase the salaries of the Superior Court judges from $6,000 to $8,000 and that of the Chief Justice from $6,500 to $8,500.

A bill appropriating money for salaries and expenses of the railroad commissioners.

A bill providing for improvements in the hospital at Penikese Island.

A bill for the construction of a new bridge across Weymouth Back river between that town and Hingham.

A bill to provide for representation of Massachusetts at the American Land and Irrigation Exposition to be held in Madison Square Garden, New York.

NEW HAVEN DIVIDEND.

NEW HAVEN, July 21.—At the quarterly meeting of the directors of the New Haven road in New York to-day the usual quarterly dividend of $2 per share was declared, payable September 20, to stockholders of record of September 15.

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 18, 1911.

To the Stockholders of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.

In view of the circular, dated July 15, 1911, issued by Mr. Charles J. Canda, who was a member of the Stockholders Committee of 1908, I now feel called upon to advise the stockholders that in my opinion it is advisable that the following steps should be taken in order to protect their interests and to secure an early resumption of the payment of dividends on the common stock, viz.:

1. The four directors to be elected at the annual meeting on the 26th instant should be independent nominees and representatives of the stockholders, who will feel that they have an interest to serve as their director or to act directly, except those of the company and its stockholders, and who can devote the necessary time to its affairs.

2. The two vacancies practically existing at the present time by reason of the resignation of Mr. Richard Delafield and the illness and incapacity of Mr. Charles A. Moore should be filled at the annual meeting and not reserved for subsequent action by the board. As there are sixteen directors, the election at the present time of six directors to represent the stockholders should ensure a change of policy and management.

3. An independent Stockholders Committee should be appointed at the annual meeting which powers and instructions to investigate the management of the company and its finances since the reorganization in 1908, to ascertain whether the large cash working capital then principally supplied by the stockholders has been duly conserved, to examine the officers' records and books of account of the company, and to report promptly the result of such investigation at a subsequent meeting of the stockholders. I feel sure that such an investigation, if thorough, and impartial, would be of greatest aid to the stockholders in determining their future action, and would tend to prevent waste of corporate funds and mismanagement in the future. The unsuccessfully urged the directors to have such an investigation made.

4. The Board of Directors should be reconstituted so as to be more representative of the stockholders' interests. The by-laws should be amended at this annual meeting in order to dispense with the present Proxy Committee, which is self-constituted and not representative of stockholders, but was originally in the interest of creditors. The provision for such a committee, I am advised, is not authorized by the laws of Pennsylvania. The qualifications for the classification of directors should also be amended at this annual meeting so that the stockholders may elect a majority of the board at any annual election. As the by-laws now stand, it may take three years for the stockholders to get a majority of the board to represent them and manage the company in their interest. Whilst due representation on the board may be accorded to present executive officers whenever necessary, the whole control and management should not be left with the representatives of past creditors and kept indefinitely in their hands. With the exception of myself and the late Mr. Frick, I am not aware of any director who has ever invested any money of the bound at any annual election. As the by-laws now stand, it may take three years for the stockholders to get a majority of the board to represent them and manage the company in their interest. Whilst due representation on the board may be accorded to present executive officers whenever necessary, the whole control and management should not be left with the representatives of past creditors and kept indefinitely in their hands. With the exception of myself and the late Mr. Frick, I am not aware of any director who has ever invested any money of or group of individuals, it is not only my interest, but, I believe, my duty to call the attention of stockholders to the present policy and methods of their proxies, as requested in Mr. Canda's circular, to the end that their interests may be adequately protected and safeguarded.

The remedy is with the stockholders, and it is for them to decide, whether or not they will take the necessary steps. All proxies are revocable, and the latest in date will control.

New York, July 20, 1911.

Referring to the circular dated Pittsburgh, July 18th, 1911, and issued in answer to the above, by Mr. Charles J. Canda, a member of the late Stockholders Committee of 1908, I now call attention to the following facts:

The reorganization in 1908, the Company received, principally contributed by stockholders..... $17,756,975
The surplus profits of the business for the years ending March 31, 1910, were..... 2,060,064
1911, were..... 4,881,105
The surplus profits for the year ending March 31, 1911, were..... $25,698,744

Making a total of.....

In the meantime the funded debt of the Company had been reduced by $3,026,000. This would enable the Company to pay all its fixed charges, seven per cent. preferred dividends (7%) and pay on the preferred stock, six per cent, (6%) per annum on its entire issue of $34,000,000 when the assenting (unassenting and dissenting shares be effected), and create an annual surplus of at least $1,000,000. From figures submitted by the accountants, this estimate would seem to be conservative."

The present Stockholders Committee has carefully investigated the estimates then made have been fully realized; yet no dividends whatever upon the assenting (common) stock have been declared. At two separate meetings of the Board of Directors, I moved that a dividend of one per cent. quarterly on the common stock should be declared, because (1) it had been more than earned, (2) ample funds were on hand to pay it, and (3) the stockholders were entitled to some return on the money they had invested in the Company and had been pledged as part of the plan of reorganization to pay such dividends if and when earned.

The Stockholders' Protective Committee was issued with full knowledge of the condition of the Company in 1908 and of its past record. Otherwise, these gentlemen would not have ventured to urge and recommend stockholders and creditors to invest in new stock at par. Instead of paying dividends on the common stock, however, the policy has been to write down assets and to put the money into new extensions and new ventures.

Some of such ventures I believe to be unwise, if not improvident. As I wrote the directors at the time, I can see no possible effort to have the Company begin the payment of dividends on its assenting stock. It must be perfectly obvious that dividends will be long deferred if the Company is to continue to invest its earnings and surplus earnings in such a manner as to leave nothing available for dividends on its assenting stock."

Notwithstanding the dramatic writing down of over $11,000,000 for alleged depreciation in the last two years, the book or asset value of the stock still remains fully 115 per cent.

It is proper that I should state that I never voted for the amendment of the by-laws as they now stand, and that at the time they were amended I declared that I would not be bound by them. I am, therefore, at perfect liberty to challenge the propriety and wisdom of continuing any longer the classification of directors and the Proxy Committee, particularly in view of the refusal of the directors, notwithstanding ample means and ample funds on hand, to pay reasonable dividends on the common stock of the Company as promised at the time of the reorganization.

AND 999 OTHER PRIZES ARE OFFERED IN THE

American's $10,000.00 Proverb Contest

ANYONE MAY START BY SOLVING TO-DAY'S PICTURE!

Don't lay your plans for outings and Summer vacations until you have entered the Boston American's $10,000 Proverb Contest!

Someone is going to be presented with the deed to a beautiful new $2,500 Seashore Home, located on Lot 4, Sunset Point, Nantasket, and this presentation will take place in a very short time.

Someone else is going to get a Metz, 1912, 5-cylinder, water-cooled Runabout, one of the most powerful automobiles on the market. And then there is another High-Grade Runabout Automobile, and nine other different contestants. Two handsome Motor Boats, 2 High-Grade Upright Pianos, 1 Motorcycles, a $200 Symphony Grand Graphophone, and 986 other valuable prizes.

What a wealth of excitement and what a store of pleasure is represented by any of these wonderful prizes!

Think for a moment how you will enjoy that beautiful Seashore Home during the out-of-door season!

Think of the healthful exercise and fun you would get from either of the fine Automobiles!

Think of the endless joy open to the possessor of one of the two classy Motor Boats!

Think of the benefits and the prospects of so much enjoyment should bring every reader of the American into the field of the friendly, legitimate contest for these prizes!

It matters nothing that you may be entering later than the "early bird" of the contest. No one need be left out in until the last picture has appeared, and then, after that, a period of ten days or two weeks will be allowed for contestants to review and deliver their answers to the Contest Department.

The back numbers of pictures that have already been published may be had at the "Contest Department," at the regular rate of the American for the days on which the puzzles originally appeared.

Sunday back numbers are five cents (return postage); daily back numbers are 1c (1 cent return postage). You may call for them or order them by mail. The Contest Department is at 275 Devonshire St.

Many will enjoy entering the contest now, even more than they would have enjoyed entering earlier in the contest. The fact is the awarding of the prizes is now not so far off. There will be no long period of suspense for those who enter now. And the puzzles are so interesting that it will be only a pleasure to go all down and solve all the back numbers.

To aid contestants, the American has on hand a supply of the attractive and useful "PROVERB" BOOKS, and each contains all the proverbs which are represented by pictures in the Proverb Contest.

A copy of the PROVERB BOOK will be mailed to anyone who sends a money order for 25c to the "Contest Department, 275 Devonshire St." Those who care to, may call for same at the Contest Headquarters at the same address. Be sure to get the American's PROVERB BOOK.

There are a few imitation books on the market which have been gotten up by dealers who have no authorization from the American, or from anybody except themselves.

For the benefit of contestants we would here warning against all persons who advertise for sale solutions of the puzzle pictures. It is utterly impossible for anyone to know anything whatever about the correct solutions beyond the results of ordinary guesswork.

Some of the solutions thus placed on sale have come into the hands of the Contest Editor through contestants. The list invariably has a large percentage of errors.

It is the height of folly for contestants to purchase the guesses of other persons. You will be more than likely to buy a wrong guess for a penny that you could solve correctly yourself.

NOW—TODAY IS THE TIME TO ENTER THIS COMPETITION. THE PRIZES ARE GREAT, THE EFFORT LITTLE!

SOLVE TODAY'S PICTURE, AND ORDER ANY BACK NUMBERS YOU MAY NEED. SEND DIRECTIONS ABOVE, AND ALSO THE HELPFUL PROVERB BOOK!

THEN KEEP ON SOLVING THE PICTURES FROM DAY TO DAY, AND YOU HAVE AS GOOD A CHANCE AT WINNING ONE OF THE SEASHORE BUNGALOWS AS ANYONE ELSE IN NEW ENGLAND!

Conditions of the Contest

THE BOSTON AMERICAN PROVERB CONTEST is a contest of skill and judgment. Prizes to the amount of $10,000 will be awarded to contestants who send the nearest correct answers. Every one living in New England, irrespective of age, is eligible to enter this contest.

Each set of answers must contain only one answer to each picture, but each person is entitled to send in three complete sets of answers.

The answers to the puzzle pictures may be sent in writing or typewriting, with pen or pencil, but the use of the typewriter or may be printed in any manner to suit the fancy of the contestant.

Participation in any other contest now being run or which may be run by the American will not debar any one from entering this contest.

Each contestant or any or all members of the family will be allowed to send in one, two or three sets of answers, but each set must contain only one answer to each picture. Each set will be considered separately, and no contestant can win more than one prize. All employes of the American and their families are prohibited from participating in this contest.

In case there are no complete lists of correct answers, prizes will be awarded to the persons submitting the nearest correct solutions. In case of a tie, award will be made on the basis of neatness and exact accuracy, but if the tie cannot be decided in that way the tied contestants will receive similar prizes.

Do not send your answers now. Keep them from day to day and at the end of the contest arrange them in numerical order and then send them all in at one time.

Under no circumstances should contestants begin to send in their answers now, as any answers sent in before the last picture is printed will not be considered.

Time will not be a factor in awarding the prizes. The first answers sent in after the contest closes will stand no better chance of success than the last answers submitted.

All answers must be delivered at the BOSTON AMERICAN CONTEST HEADQUARTERS, 275 Devonshire Street, Boston, Mass., either by mail or in person, within the specified time limit. Be sure and mail contest answers early enough days to two weeks after the close of the contest to prepare their answers, so that they can be sent in altogether at one time.

The American will not be responsible for the receipt of any answers unless sent by registered mail, addressed to the "PROVERB CONTEST EDITOR, 275 Devonshire Street, Boston, Mass."

In case contestants desire further information they should address their questions to PROVERB CONTEST EDITOR, Boston American, 275 Devonshire St., Boston, Mass.

There will be seventy-five puzzle pictures in the series used in the contest, and the solutions to only those pictures may be sent in on the coupons printed in the daily issues of the paper, or may be written on a separate slips of paper. The use of the coupon is desirable, but not necessary.

The Boston American PROVERB CONTEST reserves the right to make any changes in, or additions to, the conditions that is to make any change in, or addition to, the conditions governing the contest, and may decide all questions respecting the contest, and may make such decision on any question which may arise will be absolutely final.

Notes for Investors

Those who study market conditions and influences closely say the justification for new purchases of securities and the retirement of short contracts is supplied by the encouraging news received from all quarters.

Bankers express the opinion that the credit period for the harvest needs, particularly speaking, the moisture in many sections being sufficient to carry the crops to maturity. Commission houses report the cables having set the largest that has been known for weeks, and this is deemed significant.

The market has been working back and forth in such a narrow range for a long time that a little activity and a moderate advance would be surprising. Prices are at this level and with nothing in sight to warrant a substantial rise, except severe damage to corn and cotton, even the bulls admit that the street thinks it may be a mistake to wait for reactions before buying.

President Ripley says Atchison will report 9½ per cent. to 10 on common stock for year ended June 30. Estimates of earnings run from the younger roads, each paying more to stockholders than Atchison, but all will have smaller fractional gains after dividends than Atchison; that does not apply to Reading, such an exception of St. Paul, on a lower income will hold its own, and Great Northern will have a small deficit after dividend requirements.

NEW BEDFORD

Greater fortunes have been made in the textile business at New Bedford than were even dreamed of in the day of New Bedford's supremacy as the "Whaling City." BOSTON AMERICAN

80 AND 82 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, JULY 21, 1911

The State Should Pay All Legitimate Campaign Expenses of Candidates; and There Should Be No Others

The new law regulating practices at elections just signed by the Governor is an effort to introduce more wholesome methods of conducting our political campaigns and holding our elections. Corrupt practices grow up like weeds in the garden, and like weeds they are more difficult to root out the more they are neglected. But still, like weeds, the more vigorously they are destroyed, the easier it is to keep them out.

There is a wasteful and inefficient method of attacking corrupt practices. That method is to prohibit the candidates or their agents from doing certain things which may be done at all. Another inefficient method is to prohibit the candidate spending more than a specified sum of money or prohibiting anybody in his behalf spending a specified sum of money for campaign or election purposes.

In the first instance the ones not prohibited from doing the things which are prohibited to the candidate or his agents will do those very things for the benefit of the candidate, and it becomes difficult, if not impossible to prove agency. In the second instance, somebody will spend money for the candidate in sums exceeding the amount allowed by law, and will forget to acknowledge the expenditure.

As a general rule that method is inefficient which tempts men to disobey the law and leaves it possible for them to disobey it. The great evil of our campaign methods is the burden of expense which must be borne by the candidates or by the party organization.

Some of this expense is legitimate and necessary for the proper enlightenment of the voter and the securing of an enlightened judgment at the polls. Such an expense ought not to be borne by the candidate or the party, but belongs properly to the State.

Party organizations are a necessary instrument of government. Upon every sound theory of self-government the candidates and the parties do not struggle for office for their own benefit, but for the benefit of the State. The nearer the State brings this theory into actual practice, the better will grow our government.

The conflict of candidates and of parties is, or ought to be, merely the method by which the people hear the discussion of the different policies of government advanced by men who hold these policies to be wise, and the presentation to the people for their judgment of the men who are suggested as the public servants to carry out the policies upon which the people determine.

It is unfair to the candidates and unfair to the parties that those legitimate expenses necessary to conduct a proper and thorough discussion should be borne by the individual and not by the State.

The fact that elective office is now considered a "job" to be sought primarily for the benefit of the candidate, and that political power by a party is an opportunity to enrich its leaders and those who have contributed to the expense of the election by which they have all climbed to power, may be attributed to the fact that the State does not now assume the burden of the necessary expenses of the campaign, which is, or ought to be, conducted wholly for the benefit of the public.

When we return to first principles, rendering under Caesar the things that are Caesar's, we shall have the office seeking the man and not the man the office; we shall have it assumed, and not argued, that public office is a public trust; we shall have parties existing to make government more efficient and working for the honor of being right.

Next year we hope that our corrupt practice laws will be so extended that no man will have either the temptation or the ability to avoid them. Let our laws provide that the State shall assume the expense of halls, of literature and of carriages for the sick and infirm. Let the public assume all the expense which is necessary to give the voter the needful information and the means to render a righteous judgment at the polls.

Then let us prohibit absolutely everybody from every other form of expense except the dispensing of honest information. Let us have no carriages at the polls or near the polls. Let us have no paid workers at the polls or near the polls except such as are paid by the State. Let the State compel men to register and to vote just as the sergeant-at-arms may compel a negligent member of Congress or of the Legislature to vote when his vote is needed.

When we enact such a corrupt practice law as this, we shall find the power of the corporation lobby at the State House very much diminished. To-day these lobbyist representatives of the corporations operate through contributions to the campaign expenses of the candidates. They own, or they try to own, a candidate before he is elected, and often even before he is nominated in the party caucus.

Make it impossible for the candidate to use his money, and he may disappear even before we adopt the Initiative and the Referendum.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

CLASSICAL BAND MUSIC

Editor AMERICAN:

I saw a piece in your Sunday paper about the Roxbury people objecting to classical music, so thought I might make a suggestion about the music played at the concerts at Franklin Park. I enjoy classical music, but not when there are dozens of children yelling and crying, and the rougher class of girls and boys making a lot of noise. I went to the park Sunday and sat outside of the crowd. The marches could hear, and part of the other pieces, but when low notes were played I could hear was some children crying, or some shows yelling, and I didn't see but one policeman. I wish we could either have popular music, or enough policemen to keep the people quiet. If a woman has a cranky baby one, let her take it home. I hope we will put an article in your paper regarding this. I am not a kicker, but when I go to a band concert, I go to hear the band, and not a lot of kids squalling, for I can hear that without going to a band concert.

AN AGED HAYCUTTER.

Editor AMERICAN:

A friend of mine in Rehoboth, Mass., who has a "bug" on longevity, says that town boasts of the oldest active farmer in Massachusetts, Asa Rogers, eighty-five years of age.

Mr. Rogers arises at 4 a. m. each day, whets a scythe and mows enough grass for himself and son to care for during the day. This is repeated day after day.

Mr. Rogers and son carry in their hay on handpoles, i. e., all within a stone's throw of his barn. Mr. Rogers's boy, J. Riley Rogers, will be fifty-three years old next birthday, and he helps him with the work.

Now the point I am driving at is this: What is there remarkable about a man of eighty-five working in a hay field? Any man who will take care of himself, be good tempered, moderate in all things and refuse to worry will live just as long as Mr. Rogers and be able to do just as good a day's work.

SOUTH BOSTON PROTEST

Editor AMERICAN:

Please print the following letter so that the men elected to look after the interests of the whole people of this district (Ward 13) may see that the people are awake even if they are not.

"Why has the fountain on Broadway, near Dorchester avenue, been put out of commission?

"Is it to satisfy the interests of the rumshops and drug stores in the vicinity? Those places are all right for the few, but the multitude of women and children would like to see that fountain equipped with faucets and the water turned on so that those who prefer plain water to soda and those other fancy drinks can satisfy their thirst.

What's the Matter With the Cotton Mills?

Why so Much "Curtailment," Which Seems to Be the New Name for a Good, Old-Fashioned Shut-down? We Didn't Know, so We Asked One of the Most Eminent Manufacturers in New England. You Will Want to Read His Answer.

Life isn't altogether rose-colored in the textile towns of New England. There seems to be a cloud of uncertainty hanging over the business of turning raw cotton into cloth. What is the matter with the great industry out of which so many gigantic fortunes have been made?

In some of the cotton-mill cities, men will tell you that "they," meaning the owners of the mills—most of whom live in Boston, by the way—are "getting ready for the presidential election." The theory seems to be that "they" mean to whip the operatives into subjection, so that, when the time comes, the wage earner will "vote right."

We know that every mill worker in New England would like to step up to one of the owners and ask him what the matter is. So we found one of the leaders in the industry and, speaking for the operatives, put the question to him.

The cotton king has answered our query. Whether he has been altogether frank we leave to our readers. His reply will be printed exclusively in the Sunday AMERICAN. He tells us what the trouble is and he points out the best remedy, from the point of view of the manufacturer.

Every toiler in the mills, and every business man on the street, every physician, every attorney, everybody, in fact, in the textile towns, will be vitally interested in a special article in the Sunday AMERICAN answering the query: "What's the matter with the textile business?"

The Senate and the Workmen's Compensation Bill

Can it be that our State Senate is playing with the workingmen's compensation act as a cat plays with a mouse before she kills it?

Do our State Senators think that they can trifle with the interests of the organized workingmen of Massachusetts with impunity? Do they think that the liability insurance companies have a better cause or a longer or a stronger arm than the workingmen of the State?

The Senate is not wrestling with a new proposition. Nine years' discussion makes a legislative policy old in this Commonwealth. It is not proposed that Massachusetts shall be a pioneer among the States or the nations of the earth in protecting the unfortunate citizen whose useful labor has involved him in a peril which injures him.

Modern nations have accepted it as the duty of the State to protect the individual sufferer from the hardships and the dangers of the useful industry in which he happens to be engaged and from which the community receives the benefit of his labor.

Those who oppose this bill are the liability insurance companies and their opposition is entirely selfish. We do not blame the insurance companies for acting upon the principle that self-preservation is the first law of nature.

Of course, the insurance companies oppose this measure. But the Senate of Massachusetts is under no obligation to guarantee them a continuance of profitable business. Their attorneys like to confound the injured workmen by the plea that he has assumed the risk. The AMERICAN suggests that the Senate consider the liability companies to have assumed the risk of such legislation as is embodied in this bill.

Neither our own conditions nor the experience of other advanced countries justify the Senate in mangling or killing this bill.

If they do so, they cannot avoid the suspicion of having found something stronger or more attractive on the side of the liability companies than on the side of the wage earners of the State.

The Servant Problem

By KENNETT HARRIS

My Pearl of Price is pretty proud of what she terms her tact
She's slick as satin with the crowd she trains with, for a fact.
You'd think her work was never rough; but all the same it looks
As if she wasn't smooth enough to satisfy her cooks.

Her voice with honeyed sweetness drops; it's also soft and low.
And she can be as mad as hops and never let it show.
She's sympathetic and she's kind, she has a winning way.
But winning as she is, I find the girls will never stay.

If china's smashed, she don't complain or scold, as you'd suppose;
She even lets them entertain and feed their blooming beaux;
She waives the apron and the cap, although for style she's strong,
And, yet, for all they have a snap, they never linger long.

"Why is it?" she despairing cries. "What is it makes them so?"
And, looking at her brimming eyes, I tell her I don't know.
I rather think I understand. She does the best she can.
But she is just a woman—and a woman's not a man.

I think I'd like to take a whirl. We'd vary quickly see.
I'd give a chrome to the girl who'd put it over me.
Of knowledge I make no pretence, but I'd know how to act.
I'd simply use my common sense and firmness joined with tact.
